CALDWELL THE WOODSMAN,
The man who gave you the Wild smilax.

SOMETHING NEW

Now that the season for Wild Smilax is over and no more stock can be supplied, I wish to call your attention to the

as a most elegant Decorative Green. It is largely used by the Florists of the Pacific Coast, Washington and Oregon in decorations. The branches are FLAT, very thickly furnished with exceedingly lustrous, green leaves, and it seems to adapt itself to almost any position in decoration that the Wild Smilax can be used in.

As the introducer of Southern Wild Smilax, I think you can give me credit for knowing a good thing when I see it, and I am convinced that in Huckleberry branches you will have a very beautiful substitute for the Wild Smilax, of great value to you through the months of May and June. I am anxious to get the verdict of the Floral trade on this introduction and offer to send you a Case on Suspicion, price $2.50 per case if it suits you, nothing if it does not. Will you try a case on these terms?

THE VERDICT OF THE TRADE

The case of Huckleberry was very satisfactory as a decorating green, and we wish to compliment you on the new discovery for decorating at this time of year.
FRED C. WEBER, St. Louis, Mo.

The Market.

Trade continues fair. Weddings and commencements are using up all the good flowers coming in. The closing of public schools on June 23 created a big demand for cut flowers, more so than any previous year. Some of the retailers who are surrounded by the schools report that they had so much business for this occasion that they refused to book any more orders for that morning's delivery and say that the day can be depended upon as a busy one. The Exchange had not a carnation in the place by noon and could have handled many more.

Very few good roses are now coming in. The extreme hot weather is showing its effects. The white Maman Cochet is about the only good rose that is now being cut under glass. Outdoor pink and the white Cochet are largely depended on for summer roses, but are not yet very plentiful.

A fair quantity of good carnations is still being shipped to this market. Flora Hill has proven itself to be the best white carnation for summer. It is now as good as any cut this winter and hard to find a burst one, which was the trouble this season with that variety.

Sweet peas continue very plentiful and have sold fairly well, the best bringing from 20 to 25 cents per hundred. Southern gladioli are being shipped to this market in large quantities, but the quality is not as good as home-grown ones. There is very little sale for them and consequently many go to waste. Asparagus and smilax are more plentiful and of very good quality. Never before were dagger ferns brought from around Maryland in such large quantities as now and fine long leaves can be bought in large lots for 50 and 60 cents per thousand.

Various Notes.

At the last meeting of the Gardeners' Club, which was largely attended, an invitation was extended to the club by Richard Vincent, Jr., to visit his place at White Marsh. There are three and a half acres under glass, mostly devoted to geraniums and vegetable plants and general bedding stock, of which they make a specialty. Three houses 30x210 feet are entirely devoted to the newer varieties of geraniums, planted in solid beds, used as stock plants, and other houses filled with the standard sorts. There are about 150 acres under cultivation, mostly devoted to seedling vegetable plants, six acres in seedling cabbage plants and the same in celery, besides about ten acres in dahlias, and numerous other plants in large quantities are raised here. The entire plant is heated by six boilers, steam heat, and is noted as one of the most up-to-date heating plants in the country. There are about thirty people employed and Mr. Vincent and three sons at the head. Some time in August Mr. Vincent and one of his sons intend to take a trip abroad and see if there is anything better in geraniums over there. If there is he said, "We must have it, no matter what the price is."

GLASS AND PIPE.

I am building a greenhouse 15x100 for lettuce growing and wish to put it up as cheaply as possible. What are the objections to single strength glass 10x12? How many 2-inch water pipes will be required to maintain 45 degrees in Maine, where the temperature often drops to 25 degrees below zero?

BANGOR.

There is no special objection to single thick glass in as small sizes as 8x10 or 10x12. The greatest objection is to the size of the glass rather than to the thickness. Too much woodwork in proportion to the area of the roof is necessary in building greenhouses in which small glass is used. If it is desirable to use 10x12 glass place the sash bars twelve inches apart, lap the glass about one-eighth of an inch and use light cypress sash bars. To heat such a house as you propose, 15x100 feet, to 45 degrees during severe weather with water at 180 degrees at least eight runs of 2-inch pipe should be provided.

SEED TRADE CONVENTION.

The twenty-third annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association, held at Alexandria Bay, N. Y., June 20 to 22, was in all respects creditable to the organization. The attendance, though not as large as might have been expected, was well up to the average of other years. The close proximity of the meeting place to Canada gave the brethren from over the line little excuse for absence and several additions to the membership roll from Canada was a result. Monday evening, June 19, saw a goodly number of members arrived and the executive session at 10:30 Tuesday morning was well attended. The president's address was received with applause and the report of the secretary and treasurer was read and approved. At this session the membership committee reported favorably upon the candidates desiring admission to membership and their election took place.

A recess of ten minutes was taken in order to give time for the ladies and guests attending the convention to be informed, the session beginning at 11:30 was open to all. At this session Mayor Delaney, of Alexandria Bay, welcomed the convention to the beautiful burgh which he has the honor to represent. At the conclusion of his address he took occasion to introduce Major Durham, a resident of the Island region for thirty-three years, as the man who could probably better than any other person do justice to the subject assigned to him, "Points of Interest at the Thousand Islands." Major Durham was eloquent and his address was punctuated by frequent applause. Adjournment was taken at 12:30 in order that the members might prepare to take the "fifty-mile ramble" through the islands upon the steamer Island Wanderer. On this trip W. H. Grenell was the host and a most enjoyable time was had. Music to soothe and all sorts of refreshments to stimulate were handed out in free handed way. Upon its return from this trip the party was assembled on the hotel lawn and the convention photograph was taken.

The evening session was well attended. The time was taken up by the reading of papers. The paper by Lester L. Morse, of Santa Clara, Cal., which had been looked forward to with considerable interest, was the first one called for. Mr. Morse was unavoidably absent but his paper was very acceptably read by Secretary Kendel. Coming from an authority on the question treated, "Seed Growing in California," the information given was listened to attentively and the portion giving figures as to the acreage in California of the different standard seed crops had an especial attraction. "Good Seeds Which Do Not Grow," a subject which seedsmen have to discuss and make explanation for continuously in their business, was ably handled by C. L. Allen, of Floral Park, N. Y. "Trials and Pleasures of the Seed Trade" was treated by Harry L. Holmes, of Harrisburg, Pa., in a strong, interesting paper. "Methods of Advertising," a paper by William Henry Maule, of Philadelphia, was read by R. C. Dungan, who was introduced to the convention as Mr. Maule's right bower. The time having advanced, a discussion of the papers, which many of the members would have liked to listen to, had to be left out.

The session Wednesday morning was taken up by reports of committees, the recommendation of new committees to the incoming officers and the discussion of the work of the committees and its bearing upon the welfare of the association. At this session a fine address by R. U. Conger, of New York, upon "The Science of Business Building" was listened to. The question of the adulteration of seeds was handled by a representative of the Department of Agriculture and a committee of five was appointed by the chair to report a resolution to the convention embodying its feeling in the matter of restricting in some way the importation of trefoil as an adulterant for alfalfa and red clover. This committee reported later and its resolution was adopted. The paper of Albert McCullough upon "Increasing or Restricting Membership in the Association" brought from Mr. McCullough the remark that a question as to the interpretation of Article III of the constitution was different to different minds. This being the case, he thought the matter should be called to the attention of the incoming executive committee for decision. A uniform interpretation of all the articles of the constitution and by-laws was thought to be desirable and it was the sense of the convention that if two constructions could be put upon any phraseology the sooner a change in them took place the better. In this connection the advisability of increasing the initiation fee from $5 to $100 was discussed. This, with the matter concerning the change of constitution was referred to the new executive committee for action.

W. H. Grenell.
(President American Seed Trade Association.)

A trip to Brockville, Canada, was the order for the afternoon of Wednesday, and the host on this occasion as on Tuesday, was W. H. Grenell. At Brockville a band was stationed on the wharf to receive the party, and "The Star Spangled Banner" played under the floating ensign of Great Britain brought cheers from the boat and cheers from the dock. Twenty minutes were given to see Brockville. Part of the company went to the insane asylum and the balance to the jail. Everyone being adjudged safe, as well as sane, however, it was unnecessary to leave anyone behind. As we left the dock at Brockville on the return trip "God Save the King" was played by the band, and the Americans joined in at the parting in the cheers for King Edward.

Upon the return of the boat to Alexandria Bay the party found that the liberal-hearted Mr. Grenell had not yet exhausted his idea of what a host should do for his guests. The company was informed that a banquet would be given by Mr. Grenell to the members and guests of the American Seed Trade Association. The discussion of the menu began at 7:30. Albert McCullough was toastmaster and neat speeches in response to toasts were made by Messrs. Stokes, Page, Braslan, Ferrell, William Ewing, Sr., and others. The banquet closed operations for Wednesday.

Thursday, the most important day of the convention, brought routine business, followed by the election of officers. According to custom, L. L. May was the logical candidate for the presidency, but the generous hospitality of W. H. Grenell, aided by the no less generous solicitation of Mr. May that a departure from precedent be made at this convention, resulted in the unanimous election of Mr. Grenell for president. L. L. May was re-elected first vice-president, G. B. McVay second vice-president, and C. E. Kendel, of Cleveland, was re-elected secretary and treasurer. The nominating committee named the executive committee and at the solicitation of Charles P. Braslan an informal vote standing 32 to 5 was given in favor of San Jose, Cal., as the next meeting place of the convention. The convention then adjourned.

The adjournment by no means put any sort of a stopper on the entertainment, for each member and guest of the Seed Trade Association carried a card in his pocket bearing an invitation to attend an excursion and luncheon given by A. T. Ferrell, the man who sets up the best seed cleaning mill. Mr. Ferrell is a royal entertainer and a delightful trip was taken on the boat he chartered. It was a duplication of all the other trips as far as supplies, music, etc., were concerned, and at a stop of twenty minutes at Thousand Island Park another photograph of the party was taken. In the evening of Thursday another trip termed a "searchlight excursion" was given and the sight of the islands and inlets as seen when the searchlight was thrown upon them was beautiful indeed. No such entertainment was ever before given at a seedsmen's convention, and it will be a long time before the participants in this event forget the efforts put forth by the people who did so much to make the twenty-third annual convention a memorable one.

Convention Happenings.

The largest fish caught, as far as reported, was a pickerel weighing seven pounds, landed by Mrs. S. F. Leonard, Chicago.

The presentation of a beautiful parlor lamp to Mr. and Mrs. Page, and of an artistic hall vase to Mr. and Mrs. Grenell by the members of the American Seed Trade Association, was one of the pleasing things added to the program.

On the Ferrell excursion trip, Professor Piper, who gave the talk at one of the convention sessions on the introduction of new forage plants, was given a chance to demonstrate his knowledge of trefoil. He was handed a specimen plant of the article that one of the voyagers picked from the lawn during the stop at Thousand Island park. The professor, although out for pleasure, held a class meeting after the boat had resumed its voyage and gave out some valuable information on the subject.

A toast, offered by Buckbee, of Rockford, while handing a soda to an eastern member and holding a beer for himself: "Here's to Grenell; may his bean and pea crops flourish and yield him as much profit as his entertainment yields us pleasure."

At the convention, Chas. P. Braslan, of San Jose, Cal., carried a box containing sprigs bearing the seed ball of what he termed Canariensis Braslanii. The article was nothing more or less than the canary seed of commerce as grown in California. He is hopeful that a successful demonstration that the commodity can be grown profitably in California will be a result of an experiment he is now carrying out at one of his growing places. Up to the present all canary seed used in this country is imported from Sicily and other foreign parts.

Speaking of conventions, we take everything into account and bar nothing when we say that this is the best there is, was, or is to be.

Where was St. Louis when the Thousand Islands were parceled out? Vat?

Chicago is the only place, except probably San Jose, that could hold a candle to Alexandria Bay for seedsmen's conventions.

Wm. Ewing's rendition of Annie Laurie would test ninety-nine per cent.

The picture Harry Holmes sat for will be a "beaut" if the negative is properly worked out.

Braslan's invitation to San Jose should be accepted by all means.

The popularity of Frank Emerson when he is awake is more than equalized by his unpopularity when asleep.

The Swedish song given by John T. Buckbee is the best novelty of the year.

The acquisition of the man who works that vegetable garden opposite the convention hall would be a grand thing for the average seedsman's trial ground.

W. H. GRENELL.

The president-elect of the American Seed Trade Association embarked in the seed business over thirty years ago, in 1873, at Pierrepont Manor, N. Y. He is a grower and has largely confined his efforts to peas and beans, of which he is a very large producer. In 1892 he established a branch at Renfrew, Ont., and in 1895 removed his headquarters to Saginaw, Mich., which is now his main growing station, with many branches in the surrounding counties for receiving the seed from farmers, cleaning and shipping.

A. C. NELLIS, of the New York Market Gardeners' Association, which had the government seed order a few years ago, is out with another open letter, demanding that the President hold a post-mortem on that affair.

THE Michigan radish seed crops are looking well. Cucumber patches growing for seed purposes in the same section show a good stand. The outlook for both of these crops is as good as can be expected at this date.

CHICAGO.—It is too early to give anything definite as to what the onion set crop will do here. The early planted fields are at the critical stage at present and the fields where unfavorable weather made late seeding necessary are an unknown quantity as yet.

FROM the "thumb" district of Michigan the reports on beans are about as bad as from northern New York. Western Michigan, from Grand Rapids south, reports that better conditions prevail and that if the farmers will push planting where they have not already done so, a fairly good crop may be expected.

REPORTS from northern New York and the Canadian growing stations are to the effect that the pea crops in general are doing well. Beans, on the other hand, are having a hard time. Heavy rains in the New York sections have retarded planting beyond a safe date in many cases, and in fields where a fair stand showed above ground a great deal of washing out resulted. Replanting may make up for the damage done to a certain extent.

THE LONDON LETTER.

Since dispatching my last notes the weather has by no means been favorable to seed growing in the southern counties of England. We have experienced very cold and continuous rains, culminating in a storm of such force and tropical energy that the country looked like a vast millpond. Early subjects, such as forget-me-nots, sweet alyssum, polyanthus, primroses, Alpine auriculas, etc., must have had many of their seeds washed from their capsules, while seeds of biennials recently sown were washed out of the ground.

The black aphis has been prevalent on plants of both mangel wurzel and beet standing for seed, but the effect of the rain and storm must be to cleanse the plants from this pest. Much mischief, however, was done before the cleansing agencies came, as the aphides gather on the stems of the plants when they are in bloom and suck out their life juices. The yield of seed of both these articles must be limited, and as far as future crops are concerned must well depend upon the character of the weather at the time of sowing. Anything in the way of high-class stocks of mangel wurzel for sowing command a high price. V. M. H.

DUTCH BULBS.

Following is the report of a Holland correspondent of the Horticultural Trade Journal:

Now that the lifting of some of the early ripening tulips is near at hand, many sorts of the later ripening tulips, that should not have been ready for lifting until the end of June, are showing already the results of the hot days of last week. Whereas the first of May made its entry under favorable outlooks for a good crop of both hyacinths and tulips, the changes that have taken place since, in the way of some flying storms and very severe night frosts, have caused many of the growers to feel perfectly disgusted. Not only that, nearly all the early potatoes and beans were perfectly cut down by the frost, but the growing bulb crops have suffered very seriously, and it is quite certain now that the tulip crop at any rate will not be anything like last year's, and in many places where the blight in the foliage has been very bad, not one-half of last year's crop must be expected. It also appears from the present looks in the growing fields that crocus are likely to be both a poor and short crop, having also suffered too much from the snow and frost we had in April. The last two weeks have been exceedingly dry all over the coutinent, and crops have suffered considerably in many sections, and the agricultural world is anxiously looking out for a good dose of rain.

GERMAN SEED CROPS.

The following is the report of the Erfurt correspondent of the Horticultural Trade Journal:

It is not often that a season is practically a replica of the preceding one, but this spring promises, in the matter of dryness, to equal, if not eclipse, that of 1904, which was the driest we had experienced since 1893. We had this year a little more moisture in the soil to begin with, which was of great benefit, but the continual east and northeast winds, combined with a fierce and unseasonable heat, are rapidly neutralizing this, and a prolongation of the present prevailing conditions will have a prejudicial effect on the growing crops.

The plantations of vegetable seeds are mostly looking well so far. The annual sorts came up well, and the planting out of the biennials was accomplished under favorable conditions, so now with everything in the incipient stage, we must await the natural developments of the season.

As regards flowers, the fields are now gay with large stretches of forget-me-nots and many-hued pansies, which look well, though needing moisture. Single wallflowers furnish a wealth of rich colors, and a new shade may make its appearance next season. Sweet peas are coming up well, and a good acreage is put out. Asters are all planted, and balsams are only waiting for the weather in order to follow suit.

Perennials are making their usual brave show at this time. Aubrietias and arabis led the way, aquilegias and bellis followed, and now the pyrethrums are coming on, while the oriental poppy buds are ready to burst and display their gorgeous colors.

The stages are occupied with wallflowers and winter stocks, all in good shape, and ten weeks' stocks are rapidly developing. In the houses, cinerarias, gloxinias and calceolarias are making a brilliant display, and hand fertilizing is in daily progress, liberal spraying being resorted to in order to prevent the dust interfering with this delicate operation. Petunias and other articles are pushing forward in good shape.

Visitors from abroad are not as a rule numerous at this period of the year, but Australia and the Cape have already been represented, and some of our transatlantic friends are advised. We shall not object if they can bring some rain with them.

Lilium Harrisii

BERMUDA EASTER LILIES
Three-Leg Brand

Our grower states that we can expect to receive our first shipment of early forcing bulbs on steamer leaving Bermuda July 14. Our Harrisii Lily Bulbs give so much satisfaction over all other stocks; being freer from disease and the true Harrisii type, they recommend themselves to all Florists requiring reliable stocks at moderate prices.

READ WHAT OUR CUSTOMERS SAY:

(UNSOLICITED) RANDOLPH, MASS., February 24, 1904.

Gents—We wish to inform you that the Lilium Harrisii we had from you last year were very satisfactory indeed. They were the "true" Harrisii, with very large flowers; perfectly healthy plants. They were also very early and even—so even that we cut a 100-foot house between November 15 and January 10—all clean, with scarcely any waste. We shall surely increase our order the coming season (Signed) MANN BROTHERS.

CLUCAS & BODDINGTON CO., New York City.

Dear Sirs—We are pleased to advise you that recent consignment of Harrisii Lilies of July 30 1903, were cut on the 9th ult. and prove very satisfactory. Loss is exceedingly small and we ask you to enter an additional order for 2000 of same variety. Truly yours, (Signed)

Pittsburg, December 1, 1904. H. L. BLIND & BROS.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

We have just experienced a very peculiar week for hot weather, rain and wind. Last Wednesday they had a very severe storm just above Bakerstown and through a portion of Butler county. The wind was very strong and with it a fine hail that beat the corn, wheat and oats to the ground and cut most everything to pieces, even breaking glass in some places. But notwithstanding the weather conditions, business was above the average for so late in the season. The wholesale houses report fair sales on all good stock. Roses are becoming poorer every day but carnations are fine. Sweet peas are already a glut on the market, many more being received than can be disposed of at any price. There are still Harrisii lilies enough to supply the demand and candidum lilies are abundant and sell very cheap. A few asters are to be seen, but they are not of much value.

Various Notes.

From present indications they must be going to close all the flower shops in this city, as every one you meet says he is going to the florists' picnic July 12. There is a fine list of athletic events, handsome prizes for which are now in the hands of the committee.

In talking with an old-timer in the business, he offers this information: That Pittsburg has been short on bedding plants for several years and that there is still room for several good men to take up bedding plants and that we should have at least one man who would take up palms and ferns. If this is true it will settle all the talk of too many in the business.

Fifty residents of Versailles borough, above McKeesport, are threatened with suits by John Orth, of the McKeesport Floral Co. Most of the people are women and their troubles were brought on by a practical joker. Orth recently purchased several greenhouses at Versailles, intending to remove the plants to the Seitz farm in Versailles township, the headquarters of the company. The practical joker placed the following notice on the entrance gate to the greenhouses in Versailles: "Take everything about the place at your leisure, excepting the telephone." In a short time every plant in the greenhouses had been taken. Orth places his loss at $500. He will send notices to the fifty addresses secured by him requesting restitution of the flowers or their value in money.

Paul M. Pierson, of Scarborough, N. Y., was in the city this week, looking us over.

W. H. Carney, of J. B. Murdoch & Co., has returned from a trip among Indiana growers and to Chicago.

P. J. Demas, of the Florists' Exchange, has been in Philadelphia, New York and up the Hudson to the violet districts.

Hoo-Hoo.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Business apparently revived somewhat during the second and third weeks of June, and all the retail stores were quite busy. Weddings were numerous, but not many called for large decorations. Commencements cleaned the market up nicely, many peonies being used. On June 21 a most terrible catastrophe occurred about sixteen miles east of Cleveland, in the village of Mentor. The Twentieth Century Limited on the Lake Shore, going at seventy miles an hour, ran into an open switch. Many people were killed or maimed. All were prominent in social and business life. Four were Cleveland men. The call for funeral work was something tremendous. It took three or four large moving vans to carry the flowers from the houses to the church, then to the cemetery. Every retail store in Cleveland was taxed to its utmost and Saturday afternoon found a fagged lot of florists. Good stock was decidedly scarce and many orders had to be filled with inferior stock.

Prices are not very good, but we ought not to complain when the quality is taken into consideration. Tea roses are decidedly off and hardly worth shipping to the commission house. Beauties are fair, however, but will soon be over, as growers are throwing them out. Meteors are very good, long stems and good color. Carnations are becoming small and show the effects of the hot spell. Prices range from 50 cents to $1.50 per hundred.

Various Notes.

Smith & Fetters have been quite busy the last two weeks. They had two large weddings for Tuesday and the decoration for a very large affair to be given by Mrs. L. C. Hanna, at which orchids and hydrangeas will play a very prominent part. Palms will be scarcely used at all. Mr. Eastwell, when seen Saturday, was much pleased with their share of funeral work recently, having worked hard all Friday and Friday night up to Saturday noon.

The J. M. Gasser Co. on June 21 had five large weddings to look after, all of which were very satisfactorily executed. Mr. Jones directed all these affairs and deserves considerable credit. This firm was also taxed to its fullest capacity with funeral work, working both night and day.

Collins & Harrison, James Eadie and C. M. Wagner all had an equal share of work and when called upon declared they were glad it was over.

The F. R. Williams Co. is cutting some extra fine Kaiserin roses off plants on the new tile bench invented by Bate Bros.

Bate Bros., of East Cleveland, are sending in some very good carnations for this season of the year.

Forest City.

Morenci, Mich.—E. W. Scofield is no longer in the greenhouse business.

Kirksville, Mo.—Greenhouses are to be built at the Kirksville Normal School.

St. Paul, Minn.—Herman Bunde has returned from a visit to his brother at Eau Claire.

New Albany, Ind.—One of F. Walker & Co.'s horses ran away June 19 and scattered things around a bit, but no one was hurt.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Since the recession of the flood the hot sun has had a bad effect on all stock in the field. Stem rot is very prevalent among carnations.

DETROIT.

The season has been a wet, cold one until two weeks ago and seriously hindered the work of planting out stock and greatly stimulated the growth of weeds. The regular summer dull season has arrived and with it the time for repairs and replanting. The graduations at the schools created a little splurge the past week, although the edict of the board of education that no flowers be allowed on the stage has in a measure tended to cut out the elaborate use of them as in former years.

There is very little building in the way of new glass this year, but all are repainting and taking care of the old. Mr. Plumb is putting in two new boilers and preparing to greatly enlarge next year.

We spent a very pleasant hour with H. A. Hart, of Cleveland, on June 19. He brought his wife to Mt. Clemens, for the baths to try and improve her health. He reports a most prosperous season in Cleveland, and we have had a very good one here, but collections are very slow from outside parties, where the collecting has to be done by mail.

A. Harvey has foreclosed on the property of Mr. Dungay, at Orion, and is putting it in repair throughout. He says he is going to play with it for a year anyway, and see if he can realize the interest on his investment. Mr. Herr, formerly of this city, will be in charge of the growing.

George A. Rackham has been ill for many weeks with the grip, which he characterizes as a most infernal disease, but is now feeling much stronger.

RAG.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business is gradually dwindling to a summer basis. Yet now and then there is a spurt that tends to relieve the monotony. The weather is good, but warm, and we are not having quite so much rain.

Roses, especially white, are very scarce. The supply of Beauties is increasing, but the quality is not very good. The buds are small and they open very fast. A few Kaiserin help out. The few Liberties also sell well. Brides and Maids are about all used up. There are still some good carnations, most of them coming from the north, and they sell well. Locally they are about used up. Of other stocks, the usual summer variety is to be had. Sweet peas are not quite so plentiful and consequently are selling better. Greens of all kinds are plentiful.

Various Notes.

The annual meeting and election of officers of the Florists' Society will take place Thursday at George & Allan's. Besides that there will be all kinds of games in the afternoon, with supper in true Italian style at D. Rusconi's. A great time is in prospect and a large party will be present.

The Hoffmeister Floral Company is sending out notices that they will close the retail store at 813 Elm street during the summer months, beginning July 1. All orders will be filled from the greenhouses. The Hoffmeister sisters, who have charge of the store, will spend the summer abroad, the greater portion of the time in Germany.

Herman Schlachter, a florist on Spring Grove avenue, has sued the National Chemical Company for $8,000 damages. Mr. Schlachter's stock of plants has been ruined by the fumes, ashes, etc., from the chemical works, and he has lost the greater portion of his trade; hence the action.

Mrs. Gear, mother of Fred and William Gear, is very sick.

William Murphy and Peter Weiland are closing at 5 p. m. during the summer months.

Leo Villner, brother of Louis Villner, a Walnut Hills florist, died of pneumonia during the past week.

Charley Jones had one of the largest decorations of the season during the past week, and Hardesty & Co. also had a large one, using quantities of white peonies and Beauties.

C. J. OHMER.

RACINE, WIS.—Thomas Hinchliffe died at his home here June 11, aged 62 years. He had been engaged in the florists' business for a good many years and was doing a fine trade. The business will be continued without change by Mrs. Hinchliffe.

Tested in the crucible of experience, and they stand the test.

NURSERY PRACTICES.

At this season of the year all kinds of stock growing in nursery rows should be carefully watched and kept free of weeds and the soil around it well worked. There is so much natural moisture everywhere at this time that growers who usually irrigate more or less have not yet had to do so, and if attention is paid to cultivation on most kinds of stock it will not be necessary for another month at least. But the season that has been so favorable for the growth of the tree has been equally so to our obnoxious weeds and nurserymen have had more than their usual allowance of them.

Many growers do not irrigate their hardy shrubs or trees and for them it will be an extra good summer. Ornamental stock of all kinds is especially thrifty at the present time and can easily be kept so if the ground is sufficiently worked on top and not allowed to bake.

Such stock as will be large enough to be salable the coming season can be trimmed up to one stem now and taller and more desirable trees will result. Nurserymen often neglect this important detail until late in the season, when the trees have finished growing and the cuts do not heal as well. A poor looking tree is the consequence. This applies especially to deciduous trees of all sizes. Now is the time to start them right.

Although it may seem late, I consider this the best time to plant young pot-grown hardy stock of any kind in the field, if the soil where they are to be planted has been kept well worked. With the abundance of moisture, and possibly one watering in a few weeks, the young stock will attain by the end of the season twice the growth it otherwise would if kept in pots, with about one-twentieth of the trouble, for if there is anything in the nursery on which the grower squanders his money it is taking care of hardy stock in pots from one season to another. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business continues to be about the scarcest article we handle and is no improvement on that of the past couple of weeks. We are having a few warm days, and every one who has any money to spend has left the town. Flowers are not plentiful; that is, indoor stock, but there is an abundance of hardy outdoor stuff. Roses and carnations are being held by the growers at fair prices unless they are of very poor quality, and of fancy stock there is little to be seen anywhere. Gladioli are arriving in large quantities and are being used extensively for decorations. Sweet peas are still in their prime, although some of the growers are beginning to offer short-stemmed flowers, but there is so much natural moisture in the ground this season that the sweet pea crop lasted much longer than usual and good flowers on long stems have been in abundance. There are plenty of longiflorums and they cost the stores from $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen stems. Valley is very scarce and in some demand. Maidenhair and all kinds of green stuff is very plentiful with the exception of smilax.

Various Notes.

James Niven has taken charge of John Martin's place at Ross Station and will immediately commence the erection of several greenhouses.

A visit to H. Plath's ferneries at Ocean View is a trip well worth the trouble. Over a dozen houses can be seen at their best now and the stock of ferns and palms carried at this place reflects great credit on the management.

W. G. McTear is here on a visit from Seattle. He intends to locate in the vicinity of San Francisco.

The Society of Hortensia held the usual meeting in Oakland on Saturday evening last. Several interesting papers were read.

E. D. James is on a six weeks' visit to the Lewis and Clarke Exposition at Portland.

E. Gill, of West Berkeley, has commenced rose budding. Over a quarter of a million stocks will be budded within the next month.

Chas. Abraham, of the Western Nurseries, reports a heavy spring business.

THE JAPANESE GROWER.

The subject of Japanese competition is becoming a serious one to growers in California, just how serious, those who do not have it to face fail to understand. The Coast has had its Chinese question but the present one is far more difficult. There is scarcely a trade or business in which they have not secured a foothold and the labor unions have taken up the matter and, backed by some of the newspapers, are demanding a law to restrict Japanese immigration. But they are making no impression east of the mountains and to those who do not know the condition it seems preposterous to talk of excluding the subjects of the little nation which has whipped mighty Russia.

The Japanese is acquisitive to a degree. He lives to learn and then to apply his knowledge. He picks out the line of business he wishes to follow, works for the bare necessities of life until he has mastered the calling—which he does in a surprisingly short space of time—and straightway finds means to start in business in direct competition with the man who taught him how to do it. At first the Japanese confined themselves to growing outdoor stock, and they soon made that an unprofitable field for an American, at least in the vicinity of San Francisco. Now they are taking to building greenhouses and the alarm has spread.

It has been urged that the retail florists would be wise if they were to refuse to buy of the Japanese, but there is in the individual case the answer that to compete it is necessary to buy each item of stock as cheaply as does the retailer down the street, and collective action could have only one result; it would hasten the day when the Japanese will open their own retail stores.

Whenever the Japanese engages in a business he very soon makes it unprofitable for others. His standard of living is not so high as that of Americans and he will be accumulating money on a profit which is only a bare existence to the man he is crowding out. I hear of one Japanese firm which intends building four big houses for roses. They will employ a grower until they know all he knows and then they will run the place entirely with cheap Japanese labor. I understand the gardeners held Vegetable Forcing.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Outdoor competition has put the greenhouse product practically out of the market, except that fancy cucumbers hold firm at $2.50 to $3 case.

BOSTON, June 26.—The season is practically over; lettuce, 15c doz.; cucumbers, $1.50 to $4.50 box; tomatoes, 8c to 10c lb.

CUCUMBERS.

When an early winter crop is desired, seed should be sown without much further delay. It takes about six weeks from time of seeding until the plants are large enough to be set in the beds, and about three months may be counted on from the time of setting out until the plants come into full bearing.

It is sometimes a little hard to get cucumber seeds started, especially when the fires are out and no bottom heat can be supplied. The most common cause of failure is keeping the soil too wet or planting the seeds too deep. To begin with, it is very important that good seed be secured. We often get seeds that all look plump and fine but on close examination we find that quite a few of them are but empty shells. Some seasons are worse than others for producing such seeds and no matter how carefully they may be cleaned some bad ones will slip through. The best means of detection is to press the seed between the finger and the thumb when planting and plant only those that feel plump and full. It takes very little time or trouble to do this and it often saves a good deal of disappointment.

We prefer to plant in 2¼-inch pots, putting two seeds in each. If both come, one can be pulled out as soon as they are well up. We consider it safer to plant the two seeds, as one or other of them is pretty sure to come and it saves a second planting, but if seeds were scarce one could be used in each and a few extra pots employed. The soil used should be rather moist but not wet and the seeds should be inserted with the thin, or wedge-shaped, end downwards and placed deep enough in the soil so that the upper end will be just below the level of the surface. It is better at this season not to water the pots at planting for fear of getting the soil too wet, but they may be sprinkled occasionally with a very fine rose to prevent the soil from becoming too dry.

The question of enough heat is not a serious one at this season, as even the outdoor temperature runs high enough to meet the requirements, but it should be regulated, if possible, so that it will not run much over 80 degrees in the daytime, and shade from bright sunlight is advantageous at first to prevent the soil from drying out too fast.

After the plants are up more light should be given and as soon as large enough they should be moved up to 3½-inch pots and again into 5-inch pots, as they need it. From this latter size they can be planted into the bench. This moving up should be attended to before the plants are in any way pot-bound, both to prevent injury to the roots in moving and to avoid getting the plants hard and stunted. Frequent syringing will be necessary, even when the plants are in a small state, to check the attacks of thrips, to which they are very susceptible, but it should not be roughly done as the foliage is tender and rather easily injured.

W. S. CROYDON.

WALLACE, IDAHO.

Things are very dull in this vicinity. Business is at a standstill. Gardens are full of bloom and there is no demand at present for cut flowers, other than for a few small weddings. There is no glass within a radius of 150 miles. All stock is shipped in. There is a good field here for business for the growing of roses, carnations and other flowers. Wallace is surrounded by eleven towns. Frank X. Scully was the first one to start the business here, and the people are learning very nicely. He opened December 1, 1904, with a small window and has been enlarging ever since.

Roy McLeod has started to build a house to raise vegetables, but left today to visit the Portland fair.

Mr. Anderson, plantsman for the Missoula Nursery Company, recently passed through Wallace, en route to the Portland fair.

The Markwell ranch has built a large house for raising vegetables.

Abner Fox, who has charge of the Federal Mining Company's flowers and lawns, has a large force of men at work on new flower beds.

Sheral A. Wylie, designer with F. X. Scully, spent Friday fishing on Placer creek and caught seventy nice mountain trout.

THE SILK VINE.

I send you a spray of leaves and a few flowers of a vine I am unfamiliar with. I am a young nurseryman and have a lot to learn. Will you please give me its botanical name and also its common name and to what class of vines it belongs? The flowers are not much for size or looks, but the vine is certainly one of the finest I have seen for foliage. How may it be propagated and is it hardy? C. C. C.

This plant is Periploca Græca, commonly known as the silk vine. It belongs to the natural order asclepiadaceæ. Propagation may be effected by seeds, greenwood cuttings in summer under glass, or layers. This vigorous growing climber is well adapted for covering walls, arbors, trunks of trees, etc. P. Græca is hardy as far north as New York and even as far north as Canada if protected during winter.

W. N. CRAIG.

PEONIES.

Please tell me which are the best peonies and when to buy and plant them. S. A. P.

There are so many good peonies that it is impossible to say in any offhand manner which are the best. The purpose for which they are to be used makes some difference. For cut flowers probably no sort is more largely grown than the old Whitleyi, now generally catalogued as Queen Victoria. It is comparatively cheap, a good white and a fine keeper. Festiva maxima has generally been called the best white, but it costs more money and not every dealer's stock is true. At the recent peony show in Chicago everyone liked Marie Lemoine and Couronne d'Or. A well liked pink is Lady Bramwell. Delicatissima is another good one, and a still lighter is Golden Harvest. The best red is very late. It is Richardson's Rubra superba. At the Chicago show a better and earlier one was shown as Lee's Grandiflora rubra, but this is not on the market. There are dozens of other good sorts, but you will not go amiss on these.

As with everything else, it is wise to buy peonies early. Put in your order in July or August for shipment in September. Early orders should mean best stock and September planting will insure the plants becoming well established before cold weather. H. O.

W. J. & M. S. Vesey are very well pleased with the way their new variegated carnation, Glendale, has done the past season and particularly with the way it is holding up this extremely hot weather. It is giving long, strong stems which carry the flower splendidly; the color is as good as at any time in winter and the size is well held, the flowers are of good substance and possess an exceptional shipping and keeping quality. The plants have given a good, steady cut all winter, are apparently entirely free from disease, of vigorous, rapid growth and no burst calyxes have been seen, even in the coldest weather. The originators consider it by far the best variegated carnation to date and the judges at the World's Fair, Chicago, Detroit and Buffalo shows during the past season gave it first premiums.

Arrangements have been made between W. J. & M. S. Vesey and the Chicago Carnation Co. to jointly introduce Glendale in 1906. A considerable stock has been worked up, part to be grown at each place.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

C. D. Mills has built two houses this season, each 30x70, to be planted with carnations. He is at present planting on the streets of Jacksonville 500 sabal palms. The plants are from ten to fifteen feet high and from eight to eighteen inches in diameter. Some of them weigh as much as half a ton, and none weighs, with its ball of earth, less than 300 pounds. Mr. Mills says bedding plants sold unusually well this spring. All stock is looking well now. He has considerably increased his planting of chrysanthemums and is looking forward to a very good season next winter, when the city will be full of northern people.

Lexington, Ky.—W. S. Bell had a very large wedding decoration at Beanry, W. Va., June 20.

Auburn, R. I.—J. H. Smith says that stock and trade are good for this time of the year. The season has been especially favorable for outdoor stock and at Roger Williams park the shrubs and bedding look fine.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The warm weather does not seem to have any effect upon the flower trade, as the past week has been one of very good business. Roses are of very poor quality and can only be used in designs and funeral bunches. There has been a good demand for Beauties this week and they have brought good prices. Carnations are fair and have the preference over roses for all occasions. Sweet peas are here in large quantities. Nasturtiums, Shasta daisies, cornflowers and coreopsis are finding ready sale and are arriving in large quantities. Large wedding decorations are less frequent but there are a number of smaller ones that keep things going. Plant trade is over, stock out in the field and the growers are rebuilding, some very extensively.

Various Notes.

Ed. Ellsworth, with Geo. M. Kellogg, is doing quite a trade in the wholesale line and is able to dispose of his large stock.

The Alpha Floral Co. reports business as very good and has added quite a number of improvements to the store.

Nelson Jarrett says he has sold everything of a salable nature at his place and is looking out for stock plants for next season.

Quite a number of large funerals the past week furnished work for all and some very handsome designs were seen, showing a vast improvement over former years.

W. H. Humfeld is still busy and a look into his place shows that there must have been good business during the spring trade.

Jacob Tobler, of Westport, says he has sold out about all he had and is contemplating building some additions to his place this summer.

Julius Seyler, formerly employed by Geo. M. Kellogg, died at the hospital here from typhoid fever. Mr. Seyler was about 28 years of age and had been employed by Mr. Kellogg about seven months.

The Kansas City Floral Co. has employed Charles Black as bookkeeper, the business necessitating additional help. Mr. Black has been associated with Mr. Shaeffer a number of years.

PIPING.

I have a house 10x80 connected to which I am building a house 10x48, in which I want 60 degrees, and connected to it a house 12x90 in which I want 55 degrees. The walls are all four feet high and I have boiler capacity for hot water for 5,000 feet of glass in the coldest Pennsylvania weather. I have on hand 750 feet of 2-inch pipe and 600 feet of 1-inch. If possible I would like to use the 2-inch in the larger house and the 1-inch pipe in the smaller house. J. H.

If you can exchange the 1-inch pipe for an equivalent value in 1¼-inch, 1½-inch or 2-inch pipe it will be more satisfactory. If this is impossible the 1-inch pipe can be used in the smaller house as you suggest, but even there it may not prove satisfactory. It is a good idea to have all the return pipes in a plant of uniform size.

The larger house, piped with 2-inch pipe, should be supplied with seven runs of pipe. A flow and three returns on the exposed side, with a flow and two returns on the side next to the other house should be satisfactory.

In the house 10x48, using 1-inch pipe, it would undoubtedly be best to use a 2-inch riser the length of the house, returning in nine 1-inch returns which can be disposed under the benches on either side of the house.

PIPING FOR SEVERE COLD.

I have two connected houses, eac 14x60 feet, eleven feet to the ridge an. side walls five feet six inches high. There is glass down to the level of the benches except on the west end, where the boiler shed is. We want to return the water on the gravity system. How shall we pipe to maintain 52 to 56 degrees when it gets down to 30 degrees below zero? How far below the returns should the boiler be? A. B. C.

A satisfactory plan for piping your houses would be to place the boiler in a pit deep enough so the top of the boiler will be eighteen inches to two feet below the lowest point in the return pipes. The pipes may be arranged as follows: Each house provided with a 2-inch or 2¼-inch riser running under the ridge to the most distant point in the house and there dividing to return under the benches in four 2-inch returns. This will give nine pipes in each house, which will be sufficient to maintain the temperature desired with water at 180 degrees. In installing the system the highest point in the riser should be at the most distant point in the house, i. e., where the riser divides to supply the returns. The returns should have a gradual fall from the far end of the house, in this case the east end, toward the boiler. A grade of ten to twelve inches in the length of the house will be sufficient. A vent valve should be placed in the riser at the highest point. An expansion tank with thirty gallons or more capacity should be made a part of the system by connecting it with a ¾-inch or 1-inch pipe to the main return near where it enters the boiler. Place the tank fifteen or eighteen feet above the point where it connects with the returns, let the bottom of the tank be three or more feet above the highest point in the riser. A hot water boiler, such as is used for storing hot water in dwellings, makes a satisfactory expansion tank. A boiler for this plant should have 1,000 feet capacity. L. C. C.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Bench Building.

This is by no means an idle time with the growers. The store clerks may take their vacations now, but at the greenhouses carnations must soon be lifted. Chrysanthemums are not yet all planted and rose benches are not all filled and, if all this is done, there are benches to repair or build. I see that poor lumber is going in as bench material at several places. It is time the greenhouse men woke up and built more substantially. It is not likely any wood or metal will ever take the place of cypress for the roof material. There is no need of it, for this splendid wood seems everlasting, but for side walls and for permanent beds and benches concrete should take the place of wood or even brick. Ashes or cinders are about as good to make concrete as sand or gravel. If you use ashes, and it is a mixture of fine and coarse, you can use six parts of the ashes to one of cement. If you use sand with considerable coarse gravel in it, then the same proportions will do. If the sand is fine, with no gravel in it, then three of sand to one of cement should be used, but three parts of broken stone should be added. It makes the quantity of your material about double, with little more expense and is just as strong. Remember this crushed stone or coarse gravel fills up in bulk but does not absorb any cement and, therefore, does not weaken the wall.

The bench or bed of the future for roses and carnations will be a wall twelve or fifteen inches in height, filled in with ashes or soil, then a floor of tile and finished with an edging of cement. This is about as permanent as a bed can be made and about as inexpensive as a bench of 2-inch hemlock and, once built, affords great peace of mind.

If the wall is fifteen inches high and the tile three inches, with five inches of edge, it brings the top of the soil almost two feet above the path, high enough for anything, in fact perfection in height, drainage and durability. Some use, instead of the drain tile, coarse ashes or cobble-stones, cheaper, of course, if you have them on your place, and for a year or two good enough for drainage, but awkward to shovel on and in time must become compact from the soil filtering into the ashes or stones and thereafter cannot give the perfect drainage of the tiles.

Saving Pansy Seed.

The pansy sowing season is near at hand in this part of the country. We have found after trying different dates that about July 20 is the best time. If pansies are to be grown in cold frames and protected with sash during winter, several weeks later will do, but I am supposing that they are protected merely with straw and nature's overcoat, snow. We used to sow pansy seed under the shade of a tree, or under a shaded sash. This is not necessary; in fact, it produces weak plants. Sow in full sun, only do not let the seed bed ever get dry. The seed germinates quickly and for a few days the seed bed will want constant care. Sprinkle it not once, but ten times a day, if necessary to keep the surface moist, and every good seed will germinate. Sow thinly or your little plants will be greatly crowded before they are large enough to transplant into the winter beds.

Grass Seed.

To digress a moment, we are asked repeatedly when is the best time to sow grass seed. Undoubtedly it is in spring, up to the middle of May, or again in the end of August and early September, but all this depends on care and the facility and time you have for watering. In 1900 we saw grass seed sown every day of summer from the middle of April until the middle of September. No dry spell in July and August suspended operations. Every day a certain area was sown, and with the greatest success. All this was simply accomplished by the hose. The ground was kept continually moist until the grass was well up and big enough to stand a parching. And so it is with your pansies. Never let the ground get dry and there is no need of shade.

Berberis Thunbergii.

There is a hedge of Berberis Thunbergii in this city that I would like all lovers of shrubs and the beautiful to see. It is just inside a retaining wall, on an elevated lawn, four feet above the level of the street, a proper place for such a hedge. It would be cruel and uncalled for to shear back its lovely tender growths. It was pruned in early spring and its outline is regular, without being stiff and formal.

Privet Hedges.

The privet hedges are different. Besides the winter or spring pruning, they need a slight shearing again in July. The berberis has a branching, handsome habit of its own. The privet has not. If left to itself it makes strong, long growths and if you want to lay the foundation of a comely hedge, a shearing is necessary now. The shoots will break out with more growth.

A privet hedge is no ornament and should only be planted where it means something, for a division line of property or to enclose a tennis court. It is much handsomer than a wooden or iron fence, but if not compact and properly managed it is simply hideous and makes a gardener shudder. A privet hedge should be broad at the base, tapering on both sides to the top and slightly rounded; in fact, about the shape of a thimble. Alas, how often you see them the very reverse.

If the hedge has made a strong growth, trim it back now. We can stand a few formal lines in ornamental gardening, but only a few. Some go so far in their imitation of nature that they would have no such thing as the abnormal in color or straight lines in their ornamental gardening, but perhaps they have not seen the microscopic shells that inhabited the ancient oceans the forms of which are as formal and straight as the spokes of a wheel, and a greater author than man was there to direct the designing.

Bougainvillea.

Bougainvillea glabra Sanderiana is now a popular Easter plant. Large plants are very decorative and B. glabra is best for this. Medium-size plants of the variety Sanderiana are in best demand. Cuttings rooted in March or April should now be in 4-inch or 5-inch pots and growing vigorously. Shift as they need it. They should have the fullest light and will delight in the high temperature under glass, but need a copious supply of water. If their pots can be plunged in some material on the benches it will save labor and the plants will thrive all the better. This treatment can be continued until the growth shows signs of ripening and by October a slight drying off can be begun, but not suddenly.

Hollyhocks.

Two years ago, believing that the dreaded fungus disease had left us, we struggled with a batch of seedlings, but with no success, although we gave them syringings of Bordeaux mixture from their infancy. Seeing them growing, healthy and vigorous, in the gardens of the city, we shall try again, for there is no more stately or picturesque plant. In more favored climes they can be planted in the fall, where they are to flower the following summer. In our severe winters we prefer to winter them in a cold frame, where they can be protected by glass. Sow now. It is well to get the best strain of seed you can and sow in colors, for you are asked in spring for yellow, pink, crimson, etc. If sown now and transplanted, when large enough, to a cold frame, they will be strong plants before severe weather sets in. The disease may not be in your neighborhood, but whether or not, it is well to dip the plants, when large enough to handle, in Bordeaux mixture or, what good authorities say is better, the copper carbonate solution.

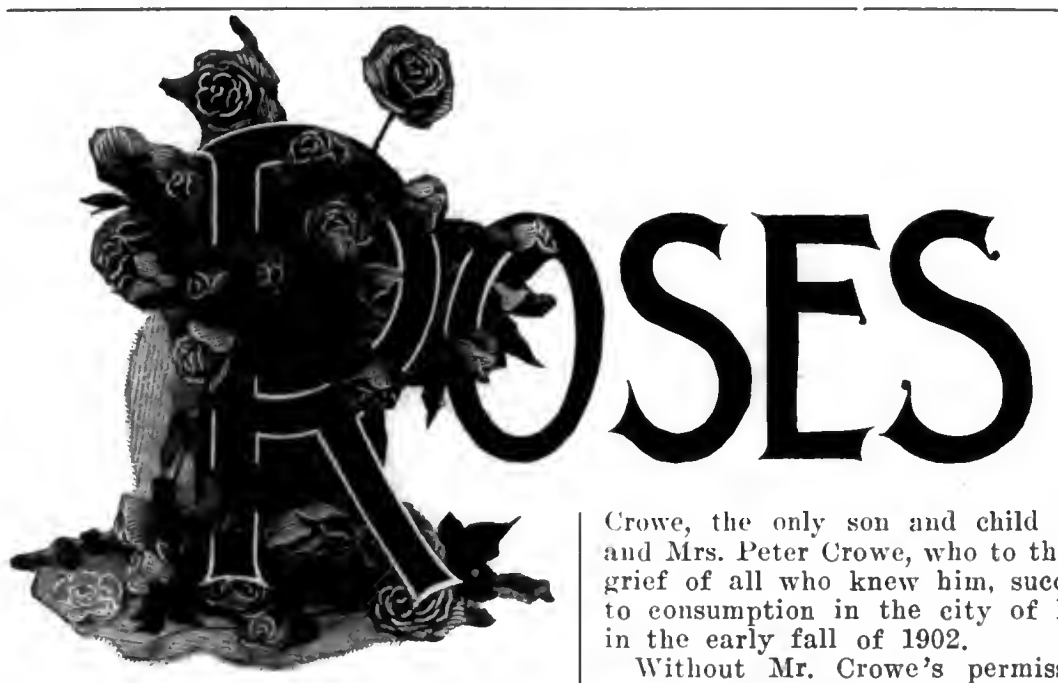
Rambler Roses.

Here is a suggestion, by no means original, but what all florists with a garden should do: plant a row of each kind of rambler roses. I should cultivate them just as the grape growers do their vines in the field. Set some cedar posts twelve feet apart and run three strong wires between the posts, the first wire about one foot from the ground, one three feet and the other one five feet. With the roses planted four or five feet apart, what thousands of sprays could be cut? And even the whole stem could be cut away, and what possibly can be more decorative? We have seen of late how valuable they would be. This is not the time to begin, but you can lay plans for it. You can get strong plants in the fall and by cutting them down, get vigorous canes the following summer, and the next summer and every following one, a crop of flowers. If we had planted them last spring we should be cutting next summer.

I said you could cut whole stems and that I think you could do and benefit the plant, for strong young growths start from the base of the plant every year. I should plant a row of Crimson Rambler, The Farquhar, the Philadelphia variety, Dorothy Perkins and any other that was a variation in color. The rows ought to be at least six feet apart and run north and south. If you did not cut all the beautiful sprays you would be repaid by their beauty and glory.

William Scott.

A FINE ERYTHRONIUM.



Outside of Victoria, B. C., and the immediate neighborhood the beauty of Erythronium revolutum Watsoni is but little known. Here it goes under the local name of "wild Easter lily." It is ubiquitous. The earliest flowers appear in the woods and among copses of scrub oak. The latest and best are in the meadows. It is found wild with from one to three flowers on a stem. Cultivated in gardens, it has produced as many as six flowers to the stem. It grows from one to two feet high, with a pair of beautifully mottled leaves at the base of the flower stem.

The flowers are revolute, white, sometimes tinged pink on the back of the segments. This only occurs in full sun. The base of each segment has a brownish blotch, which gives the flower the appearance of having a zone of this color around the throat and greatly enhances its beauty. The illustration on page 351 does it justice. Some idea of the size of the flowers may be formed from the measurement of the jardiniere, which was five inches high.

Note that these flowers have all been pulled up with the base leaves attached to the stem. This is the end of each bulb so treated. The park at Victoria was once carpeted by thousands of these lovely blossoms in the spring. Now it is a hard matter to find one. So much is this flower prized by residents that it is rapidly becoming exterminated within walking distance, so much so that the Natural History Society of Victoria appealed to the people to be careful in picking the flowers and not to pull them up with the leaves attached. It increases readily from seed and we have reseeded the park and hope to conserve this ornament to our wild flora.

Whether this bulb would be hardy in the east, I cannot say. I do not know of its occurring in any locality where the thermometer goes much below zero. It is at least as hardy as its Californian congeners and as a florist's flower far more useful. I could have shown Gertrude Blair vases and table decorations this spring, by some of our ladies, that would have satisfied even that arbitrary critic. So graceful is the flower that it falls into position of its own accord and it is almost impossible to make an inelegant arrangement.

Edw. Alex. Wallace.

SOME ROSEBUDS.

The beautiful group of roses with Grandpa Peter Crowe and his two sweet little granddaughters are the same roses that captured the first prize when the American Rose Society held its convention and exhibition at the famous Waldorf-Astoria in New York. They were mostly Bridesmaid and Bride. The writer has seen these wonderful roses, or similar ones, many times, both on the plants and in the cool cellar. With all his success in raising these magnificent flowers in his own peculiar style, it is easy to guess that there are two rosebuds in the Crowe establishment cherished and loved above all American Beauties, but American beauties they are, "of purest ray serene." These two dear little girls are the daughters of William J. Crowe, the only son and child of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Crowe, who to the great grief of all who knew him, succumbed to consumption in the city of Denver in the early fall of 1902.

Without Mr. Crowe's permission, I want to say a word about his method of growing roses, for in these days, when some will have nothing but a raised wooden bench and others advocate semi-solid beds of one of several different plans of construction, it may be of interest to know that these roses are grown in an absolutely solid bed. Mr. Crowe had a block of six houses, each 18x150 feet. This was one block, besides others larger. The ground on which the houses are to be built is graded level, or with a slight fall either way. Then it is ploughed deeply, working in lots of manure. Then the houses go up. They are heated by steam, the pipes being all on the posts supporting the gutters, there being no dividing partitions between the houses. A 6-inch board set on the ground is the side of a bed and to this depth is filled in with good compost. The soil is a yellow loam, rather heavy. What proportion of manure it contains we do not know, but we think not over one-fifth in bulk. The second year there is a mulch of two inches of soil and manure put on the surface. The third year another 6-inch board is added and another heavy mulch. Mr. Crowe uses no stakes or supports for his roses, cutting the strongest stems within a few inches of the ground, and hence the great stems for which Mr. Crowe's roses are famous.

Mr. Crowe is a great believer in liquid manure, which is copiously applied at a temperature of 55 degrees. I attribute his great success to a soil finely adapted to roses, but still more to a close personal attention. Before he rented the rose department of his place to the Messrs. Brandt Bros., from Madison, N. J., a visit to Utica would find Mr. Crowe stripped to his shirt and delving among his roses, and now you will find him equally busy with his famous adiantum.

The houses are equal span, running east and west, two beds of six feet each, and it is wonderful how narrow are the paths when you know Peter Crowe is fifty-three inches around the chest, but then he is only thirty-four around the waist, so that accounts for it.

What a chapter could be written on the subject of "personal attention." As I grow nearer the end of my tether I realize that if ever I made a marked success with any plant it was neither luck nor superior knowledge. It was purely a love of my work, and close interest and attention, such attention as that with which a faithful doctor watches the latest symptoms of his patient. You can learn from others the proper temperature, the best soils and manure and other points which are really only the rudiments of gardening. It is only experience or knowledge gained by a love of your work and your plants that will teach you the many small but important points that bring great success.

The man who has to depend entirely on his foreman is under a great disadvantage. Excellent men there are, both with ability and faithfulness, but they are not out of work, and unless the boss himself has his mind on his plants and watches their daily welfare, delighted at their prosperity and depressed and worried at any setback, he had better change his business. There are no union hours with a good gardener. He may give over labor in eight or ten hours, but his mind and, figuratively speaking, his heart, will be with his pets in all his waking hours. This close and unflagging attention you cannot buy at any price. If you think you have left on too much air and the night is chilly, it is only a labor of love to go to the houses at 10 o'clock at night and put things right. That is the sort of thing I mean by attention. Knowledge we must have, but faithful, never ceasing care counts for far more in growing anything pre-eminently well. No matter whether you see a grand specimen chrysanthemum, or Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, or a house of roses, don't think the man who grew them had luck or knew so much more than you. He loved his plants, he watched them and would sacrifice almost anything for their welfare.

An employer of our city told me that a certain young man who has since proven himself a phenomenal grower of cyclamen and Begonia Lorraine, used to eat his lunch in ten minutes and spend the remaining twenty minutes with his pipe, seated on a chair gazing at his pets, a bench of Gloire de Lorraine. That revery was not in vain. Oh, this is a big subject, young man! If you wish to ever excel and be a successful grower you must learn to love the plants under your charge; to see them suffer for water must hurt you more than to be thirsty yourself.

NOTES FRCM ENGLAND.

What a marvelous advance has been made with the streptocarpus, during the last ten years especially. It is rapidly rivaling the gloxinia in many respects. The flowers have become very large and the corollas are becoming finely rounded. The colors are superb; a certain richness of violet and even blue is found in them. The plants are grown to a great size, and they are wonderfully floriferous. The possibilities of development in the streptocarpus are very great.

The strains of single-flowered, long-spurred aquilegias have been brought to a great pitch of excellence by our English growers. They are hybrids of A. cœrulea, Californica, chrysantha, etc. They are vigorous in growth and an individual plant throws a large number of flowers, which stand up bold and erect to the eye. Some having pleasing rosy tints in combination with sunset hues, are highly attractive. The old regard for double aquilegias has quite died out and yet they have a simple beauty of their own.

I fear that little if any headway is being made in the way of improvement in the habit of growth of our races of dwarf nasturtiums, though they are so popular on both sides of the Atlantic. New colors are introduced as variety is sought for, but there is a looseness of habit in the growth of many of them and, while the flowers can lay claim to size, they lack the form which is such a prized property by our English florists. Then there is a great burst of bloom extending over a few weeks and after that the energies of the plants are directed to maturing their seeds, which are produced so plentifully. It is reasonable to suppose that if there were less seed production there would be greater continuity of bloom. But with all their faults they will often produce a second head of bloom in late summer, following on a dry time.

The German double annual wallflowers are now grown sparingly in gardens, and yet there are some very beautiful things among them. Occasionally a collection puts in appearance at one of the meetings of the Royal Horticultural Society, and then they are greatly admired. But both the gardener and the trader decline to grow them and the annual double wallflowers have fallen away into neglect, with thunbergias, maurandia, Mina lobata and many fine old subjects once highly popular.

We appear to have made but very little progress in this country in the improvement of single wallflowers. A seed firm staged a collection at the recent Temple flower show, but the lifting from the open ground and conveying to the place of show did not improve their appearance. They require to be seen as they are growing in the open air. Vulcan is a very fine single dark, an excellent selection; and Vilmorin & Co.'s Nankeen yellow is both distinct and remarkably good, both dwarf and very showy. V. M. H.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

AN AID TO TRADE.

More than once in recent years has the Ladies' Home Journal turned its great influence in favor of the flower trade but never more acceptably than in a series of illustrated articles by H. H. Battles which are now appearing and which, placed in a million homes, cannot but do much to extend the use of flowers.

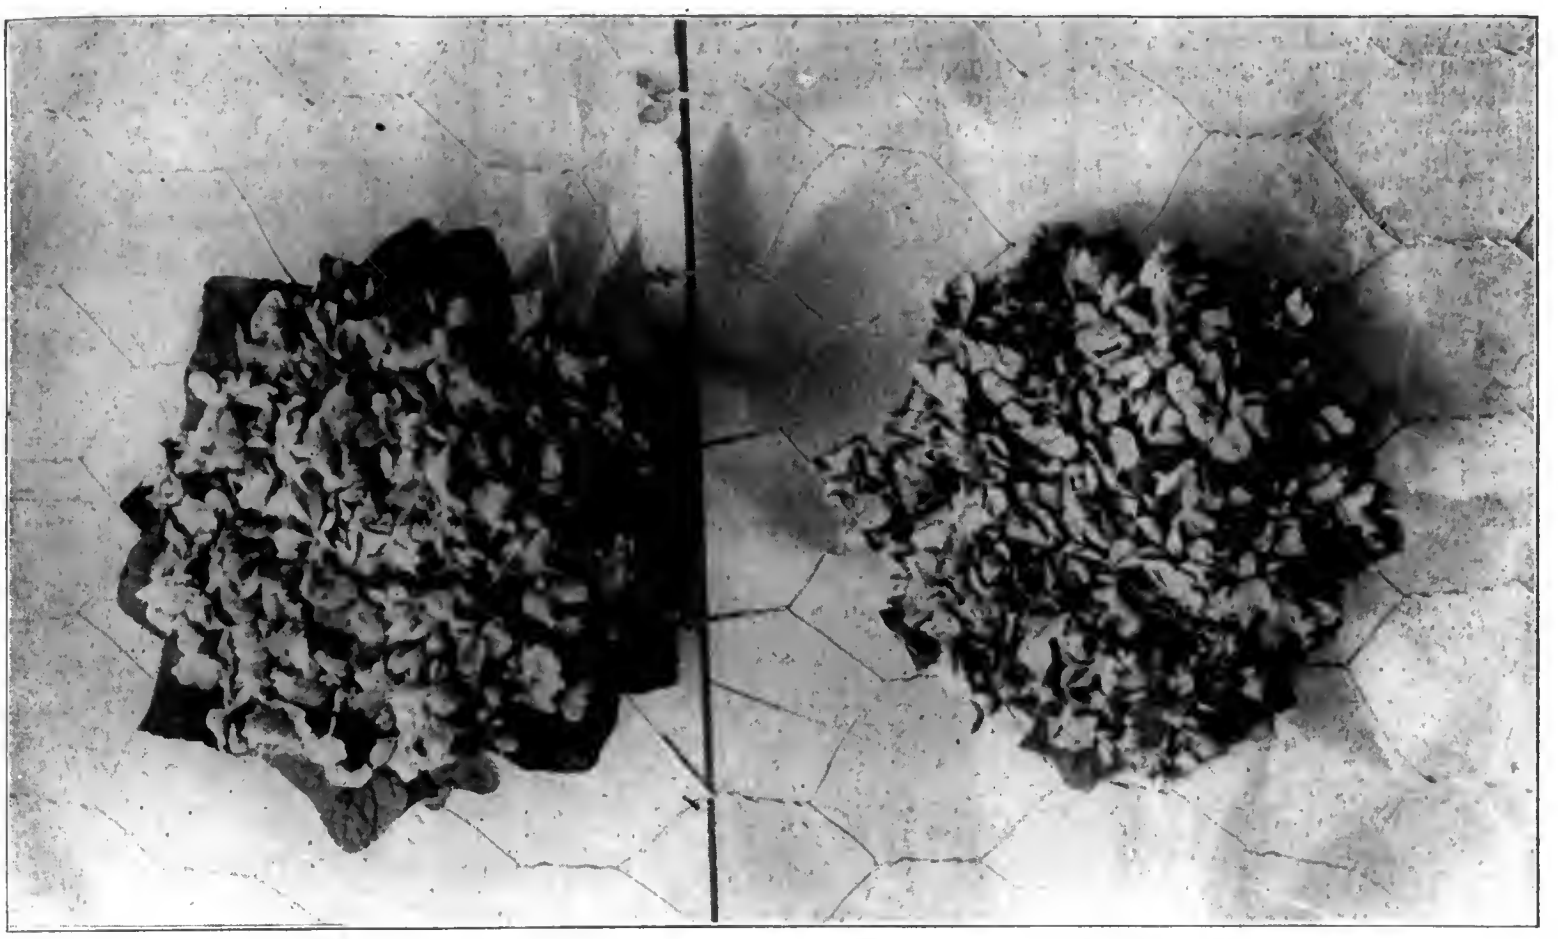
Mr. Battles is not one of the school of verbose writers; rather he leans toward the tabloid form of literature, being content to suggest a thought and let the reader's own intelligence work out the to-be-desired conclusion. To such a clientele as that of the Ladies' Home Journal this must be a particularly pleasing style and such a paragraph as the following, from Mr. Battles' article for June, "Flowers for Mother and Child," will be sure to have far reaching results of money value to every florist in the land:

"The very pretty custom of sending flowers when a child is born is growing rapidly. A few years ago flowers were simply sent to the mother; now the little one is generally included. This is done in many ways. At times they are arranged in a large basket with a tall handle, with a very small basket filled with dainty flowers tied to the handle, as shown in the illustration below. No explanation is needed that the small one is for the baby. If the child is a little girl there is sent a miniature conventional hand-bouquet made about seven inches in diameter with ten or fifteen yards of baby ribbon tied to the handle and flowers attached to this ribbon. Then again, there is sometimes extravagantly broad ribbon on the same size bouquet. If the baby is a little boy a regular boutonnière with a pin is sent. When the name of the child is known he or she is addressed rather formally as though grown up. Sometimes there is an aunt or an uncle of the Betsy Trotwood type who assumes that the name has been settled. Once a proud grandfather opened a savings-bank account, naming himself as trustee, and sent the pass-book in a box of flowers addressed to the child. Another time a set of little pins was sent: each pin fastened a miniature rosebud on a large bow of five-inch baby-blue ribbon. As a contrast a large handsome cluster or an old-fashioned bouquet with lace-paper is sent to the mother. Frequently very large chrysanthemums with the miniature pompons are grouped; then, again, they are sent separately, addressed respectively to the mother and child. American Beauty roses and the little old-fashioned Bon Silene roses are treated the same as are chrysanthemums."

There are two columns more of the same good talk, with excellent illustrations. The trade will owe thanks to the publishers and the author for putting this class of matter before the public. It is not only worth vastly more but is very much more readable than much of the flower talk the magazines are printing.

RETAILERS' ADVERTISING.

Reading in the Review of June 1 an article on retailers' advertising and noticing the reproduction of several advertisements that have appeared in some of the daily papers, I am glad to learn of the stand that your paper has taken on advertising for retail florists and ask the privilege to offer some suggestions that I think will help the retailer.



The first important thing in advertising is to have something the people want and the next important thing is to tell it in such a way that it will interest them. Every retail florist should advertise in the daily papers of his home town. He should plan an advertising campaign, beginning in October, using a little space once or twice a week, with a good cut of some pretty flower that is offered at that season of the year, stating the price of the flowers or plants that are being advertised. Attractive cuts and prices are necessary to an advertisement to bring the best results.

Do not advertise flowers or plants in the summer, when people are away, or when those who remain are supplied with choice flowers from their own gardens and then think that, because only a few answer the advertisement, publicity does not pay. Do not think that an advertisement at Thanksgiving, Christmas or Easter is a waste of money. Though many people will buy flowers and plants whether you advertise or not; there are thousands who are not buying, and many who are not buying of you, who would do so if reminded of your location and of your plants and flowers. What would you think of a clothier who would advertise winter clothing in the summer, or summer clothing in the winter? It is the same way with florists. You cannot expect people to buy when society is away at the mountains and lakes.

Advertisements should describe flowers and give prices. Few people know the different flowers and their uses and are inclined to believe that flowers are an expensive luxury. Tell them how to use flowers and show them that they not be expensive beyond moderation.

Sales on special days are a good thing for new business, but do not give an inferior grade of goods when a first-class article is advertised. The public will soon find you out and then no matter how much you advertise it will not bring results. Be honest with the people. If you advertise first-grade roses for 75 cents a dozen see that they are first grade.

It takes years and lots of effort to build up a business. The best way to talk is through the newspapers of your home town. They reach the people of whom you expect patronage. Start a campaign this fall, order your cuts and keep at it. HENRY L. PATTHEY.

VIOLET GROWING.

BY B. T. GALLOWAY.

The First Picking.

Usually by the beginning of October, weather conditions being favorable, the first violets may be picked. Of course, the flowers that are produced in the early part of the season are never so large or fine as those later on. Still they are violets, and it has been our practice to begin sending them into the market at the earliest practicable moment, simply with a view to creating a desire for better flowers later on. It requires a certain amount of time to educate the people to the fact that violets are in the market, and the earlier one can start, even with these ordinary flowers, the better.

Bunching.

One may be ever so successful in growing a crop of this kind, have fine flowers, and yet without good taste and judgment in picking, bunching, and marketing, poor profits will result. A man with very ordinary flowers and good judgment in the matter of handling and picking can often get a great deal more for his crop than one who has good flowers and fails to recognize the essentials in putting them up in attractive bunches. We have seen very ordinary bunches which had been put up without any regard to neatness, bring, when rehandled and rebunched, more than four times the price they were selling for before such treatment; that is, violets selling on the street for 35 to 40 cents per hundred have been bought, rebunched and neatly tied, and sold readily for $1.50 per hundred.

The usual practice is to put the violets in bunches of fifty, or on special occasions in bunches of 100. Surrounding each bunch should be a neat backing of violet foliage, either of the single variety or the leaves from the double sorts. This matter will be more fully understood by consulting the illustrations of the bunched flowers.

Marketing.

Attention has already been called to the necessity of having a constant supply of good flowers, and if the crop has been carefully grown there will be no difficulty on this score, providing the grower has 2,000 plants or more. The violets should be got into the market as quickly as possible after the picking, as every hour detracts from their desirable features, especially in the matter of odor. Odorless violets are practically worthless, but notwithstanding this fact great quantities of them are thrown on the market each year by growers who must necessarily ship long distances. A well-grown, large, sweet violet, properly bunched, will always be able to command good prices in the face of any number of cold-storage kinds which have been so long separated from the mother plants as to have lost all odor and pretty nearly all semblance to the flower.

No success can be obtained in the sale of the flower without a careful study of the markets. The local needs should be investigated and pandered to. Wherever it is practicable to create an interest in the flower by unique systems of bunching or handling, such systems should be adopted. It is the man who looks out for such innovations that usually is able to command the best prices. If the violets are intended for the local trade they may simply be loosely packed in the greenhouse and sent to the stand or store and bunched there. This always has some attractive features and advantages, in that it enables the people to see the bunching actually going on and is in the nature of an advertisement of the goods. This is particularly the case where one is making a specialty of violets and is endeavoring to dispose of them as already suggested, namely, through the creating of a special demand and trade in connection with some store, not necessarily that of a florist. If sold to a retail florist, of course, the methods of bunching and handling may be entirely different. The usual plan in selling to a florist is for the grower to bunch them before shipment. Much of the success, therefore, of his efforts will depend on the neatness with which he does this.

Packing for Shipment.

If the grower is doing a shipping business it is necessary to pack the violets properly in order to keep them fresh, and in cold weather to prevent freezing. Great care should be exercised here in the matter of making the packages attractive. One of the most satisfactory methods of shipping violets is by means of a common leatherette telescope box. This can be made so as to hold from 500 to 1,000 violets. By a proper bunching and use of a wire frame within the leatherette telescope the violets reach their destination in excellent shape and when opened up are fresh and sweet.

It too frequently happens that growers are careless in this matter and will send their violets to market in rough board boxes lined with unsightly newspapers, which condition always detracts from their appearance and consequently from their price. The leatherette boxes are returnable and can be used over and over again. They have special advantages in that the flowers can be securely wrapped and packed so as to avoid freezing and, furthermore, after a while they become saturated with the violet perfume and act directly in the matter of aiding the violets to hold their very desirable odor.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Preparations for Housing.

Now that your plants in the field are well under way and press of work somewhat relieved, the matter of emptying the houses, repairing, cleaning, painting, whitewashing and refilling the benches with fresh soil can receive attention.

The plan of allowing exhausted plants and soil to remain in the benches until everything is as dry as a tinder box, is not to be recommended. Aside from the appearance of desolation and the chance afforded insect pests, etc., to increase and multiply, it is injurious to the woodwork and detrimental to the house in many ways. After deciding to "throw out" a house or bench, the sooner it is put back into shape for replanting the better.

One cannot be too thorough in the work of cleaning. As soon as the soil is removed from a bench, the bench should be swept and washed to remove all the soil adhering to the sides or bottom, and especially that very likely to lodge in the drainage cracks. A stout hose, good pressure of water, an old broom and a fair amount of elbow grease will do the trick.

Before the boards are thoroughly dry, apply the whitewash, preferably hot.

The space under the benches, in walks and any crack, corner or crevice where spider webs and dead foliage are accustomed to associate should all be cleaned of dirt or litter.

It is well to make provision for a liberal quantity of whitewash. Lime is not only a disinfectant and destroyer of disease germs, but a preserver of wood as well. A coat of wash applied hot to the inside of a bench will add considerable to its life. This is said to be particularly true when used in new lumber.

Air-slaked lime will be needed in bench soil and for other purposes, so when purchasing the supply enough extra should be secured to provide for this. It will be economy, as a barrel of lump or quick lime increases greatly by air-slaking.

If you are to use manure in bottom of benches, do not be induced to buy or use that which is too rotten. So called "well rotted" manure is usually on a par with odorless fertilizers. We have seen fresh dropped manure used for this purpose with good results.

If not already done, give the soil pile a turning over. Again handled in refilling the benches the whole mass becomes thoroughly mixed and in fine mechanical condition.

CARNATIONS IN GERMAN.

A subscriber in Germany writes as follows:

"Is existing in the German language a particularly book of the especial carnation cultivation and what firm is that delivering? Otherwise what book in the English language may be recommended excepted those of Mr. C. W. Ward of Queens, which I do know?"

If any reader can enlighten our friend the Review will be pleased to forward the letter.

JUNE BUGS.

In the Review of June 29 H. T. asks if the larvæ of the June bug will do any harm to the roses that are planted out in his rose house. They will do a great deal of harm, for they keep working through the soil and cut the young roots and the stronger ones, if they come in their way, and on bright days you will see your plants wilting. When they get larger they will girdle the plants just under the soil. I had the same experience as H. T., having a large number in my rose house. I tried a strong solution of tobacco water in one part of a bed and mixed a half bushel of unslaked lime into forty gallons of water and watered another part of the bed with it, but it did not seem to kill any of the larvæ. So I got bisulphide of carbon and made holes one foot apart with a broomhandle and poured one teaspoonful into each hole. A man followed me with sifted soil and immediately filled up the holes. It killed every larva and it did not seem to injure the rose plants. The beds were wet when we applied the bisulphide. JAMES WHEELER.

THE QUINTETTE.

Arthur H. Fewkes, of Newton Highlands, Mass., the present chairman of the plant and flower committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, has for quite a number of years been a member of that committee. Mr. Fewkes originated and disseminated some very good chrysanthemums when seedling raising was first started in America, sending out Henry A. Gane's famous set, and still remains a mum enthusiast. As secretary of the American Peony Society he is a valuable man in the right place, few men possessing a better knowledge of these popular hardy plants.

Robert Cameron has been a valued member of the committee for several years and is a constant exhibitor of hardy herbaceous plants, aquatics and stove and greenhouse plants at the exhibitions. Mr. Cameron has had charge of the Harvard Botanic Gardens, Cambridge, for about twenty-five years and visitors there always find something to interest them. As his name would indicate, he is a graduate of Kew and a first-class botanist as well as a skillful gardener, a combination not often found.

James Wheeler is the present president of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, of Boston, also vice-president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America. He has for many years had charge of the estate of Joseph H. White, Brookline, Mass. Like Mr. Fewkes, he is also especially interested in chrysanthemums and peonies. A sketch and portrait of Mr. Wheeler appeared in a recent number of the REVIEW. Along with Mr. Cameron, he has charge of the arrangements for all the Boston exhibitions and these duties have always been performed in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

William Nicholson is best known as a producer of choice carnations, although many other flowers are grown well by him. A sketch of his fine establishment at Pleasant Hill, Framingham, recently appeared in the REVIEW, He is a member of C. S. A., American Rose Society, S. A. F., and American Carnation Society and has held important posts in several of these. He has been located at his present stand sixteen years.

W. N. Craig is superintendent gardener on the F. L. Ames estate at North Easton. Besides being a member of the plant and flower committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, he is a member of its board of directors, the garden committee and its committee on arrangements. He is also secretary of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston. He is a thorough plantsman and the New England representative of the FLORISTS' REVIEW.

VERBENA MISS WILLMOTT.

"Verbena Miss Willmott is now thoroughly established as a pot plant for the London market," says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser. "This season it is more plentiful than ever, and still sells well. The best plants have been making from 12 to 15 shillings per dozen, which must be a remunerative price. Once get a healthy stock, there is little difficulty in growing this useful verbena. Provincial growers should find it a useful plant, both for pots and bedding out; there is no pink flower that makes a better show. I shall always remember the first time I saw this in a bed. It was at a distance, and the distinct glow of pink was beautiful; and it was not until I got closer that I found out what it was, and then I could hardly believe a verbena could make such a bright show. I lost no time in procuring stock, and I believe I was one of the first to grow it as a flowering plant for pots. It was about five years ago that it was shown in a group at Richmond flower show by H. J. Jones, and since that time it has gradually grown in favor, until it is seen at least on a dozen different stands in Covent Garden flower market. There have also been others added, including a good scarlet and a blush white. A purple was also grown last season, but I have not yet seen this in the market this spring. These may all find some favor, but none will equal the beautiful pink, Miss Willmott.

"In regard to culture, as stated above, the most important point is healthy stock. This may be had by growing on late struck cuttings in pots, keeping all bloom cut off; and dip or fumigate the plants if insects attack them, and the frequent use of sulphur to keep off mildew. During the early part of the winter they may be kept on a shelf in a cool house, and removed to a warm house about January, when they will soon make good cuttings. For early flowering three or more plants may be grown on together in each pot. They will require some stopping; this should be done so that all the shoots start together. They may be grown in any ordinary compost, but good loam with plenty of manure will suit them best, and liquid may be used freely as soon as the roots are round the pots."

INSECTS AND INSECTICIDES.

Plants generally are now set out on the benches and a daily routine of watering, syringing and insect hunting is in order, the latter requiring more time and care than are usually given to it. The most insignificant, individually, of these insects, the black and green flies, do more damage, probably, than all the other insects combined. They are so small and so common that they are generally ignored until they become too prominent and fumigation has to be resorted to.

The green fly is much worse than the black, because it works in the extreme tip of the growth and as the leaves develop they are found to be badly crippled. Dusting the plants with tobacco dust is the best thing to kill green fly and I would strongly recommend purchasing this dust from those manufacturers who make a business of producing an article for this purpose. "Any old kind" of dust may do some people, but the particular grower wants something that will do the work efficiently and without any injury to the plants. The same thing applies also to the fumigating powder.

After extended experiments I have decided to my own satisfaction that the cheapest and best fumigant for chrysanthemums is the tobacco dust sent out for that purpose and I now use nothing else. I specify for chrysanthemums because that same tobacco dust when used in a rose house ruined a crop of buds for me and since then I have pinned my faith on Nico-fume for roses.

Care must be exercised, of course, so as not to get the dose too strong. In a house 200 feet long I have found an ordinary pailful, or a little more, to be sufficient for a fumigating when it is divided up into numerous small heaps and they are all lighted simultaneously. I do not care to spray the foliage with any of the liquid tobacco extracts, as the leaves are easily injured in this way, as can often be seen by their being burned around the edges and otherwise crippled.

It is always better, either when using liquid tobacco or dusting, to do this work in the evening and wash it off the next morning, before the hot sun has any effect on it.

The best friend the grower has for helping him keep down the fly is the lady bug and every one should cherish this insect as a friend. The larva of the lady bug is an insect from a quarter to a half-inch long, fairly active and having violet-colored markings on its back, and seems to live for nothing else but to eat black flies. An insect of this description should be encouraged, for it certainly does nothing but good.

Caterpillars are also on calling terms with us again and need watching. If you can find the eggs before they are hatched you are saving yourself considerable work later. They are found on the under side of the leaves, tiny yellow eggs deposited in a circle. When first hatched the young caterpillars stay on the same leaf for a few days, but when once scattered over the plant it is impossible to find them all. When caterpillars are very numerous Paris green may be used to poison them, but under ordinary conditions hand picking is best.

There are few insects that do not use the chrysanthemum as a host plant, but care and watchfulness will prevent any very serious loss. In certain sections the insects peculiar to those sections are found to a greater or a lesser degree on the chrysanthemum, but in the northern states the principal ones are fly, caterpillars and grasshoppers, with the usual accompaniment of red spider and thrips, if cultural methods are not properly followed.

CLEVELAND.

The body of John Hay, the world famous secretary of state, has been lying in state in the Chamber of Commerce since Monday morning. The result of Mr. Hay's sudden death and the bringing of the body to Cleveland for burial on Wednesday has been a great call for funeral work of the best class. Every retailer has had all he could do. There was an absence of flowers around the casket Monday, as compared with the floral displays so often seen at the funeral of lesser people. One large wreath of roses and sweet peas and two crossed palms caught and held together by a broad band of purple ribbon rested on the casket and on the floor at both ends of the bier lay two other wreaths of roses. Behind the casket was an embankment of palms, and potted plants were scattered around the hall.

All day Tuesday a string of messenger boys delivered floral tributes at the home of Mr. Mather, brother-in-law of Mr. Hay. They came from all parts of the United States, and a number were sent by foreign countries. Some of the designs were shipped from other cities but most of them were made by leading local retailers on telegraphic orders. Early Wednesday the flowers will be taken from the house to the cemetery, where they will be arranged about the grave, while the services are being held in the chapel.

PARK SUPERINTENDENTS.

That distinguished body of horticulturists, botanists and engineers, the American Association of Park Superintendents, has just concluded what we hope was a very enjoyable annual convention at Buffalo. The local committee to arrange for the comfort of the visitors was John Brothers, superintendent of Buffalo parks; Prof. Cowell, superintendent of the Botanic Garden, and Auditor Seymour, of the park department. From some real or imaginary cause Mr. Brothers was absent from the opening and all other meetings. In fact, he was not visible during the week. His place was more than well filled by Mr. Cowell and the full quota of the committee was filled by James Braik, the assistant but actual superintendent of the parks, and as the writer was merely a guest of the committee he has the right to say that they did their duty well.

The meeting was called to order at 10 a. m., June 28. President Wm. A. Egerton, of Albany, presided. The principal business was the report of the secretary, John W. Duncan, assistant superintendent of the Boston park system. After some discussion on dues and the issuing of bulletins, the meeting proceeded to the election of officers. The office of president is one of honor, but not of arduous duties and very properly passes along. The secretary and treasurer (one office) does the work. Theodore Wirth, of Hartford, Conn., received the unanimous vote for president and John W. Duncan, of Jamaica Plain, Mass., who tried hard to be relieved of the secretaryship, was re-elected. Evidently the association knows a good thing when it sees it. Mr. Duncan is an ideal man for the place, patient, courteous, but jolly and enthusiastic in all park work.

Vice-presidents elected are: Byron Worthen, Manchester, N. H.; Edward H. Perry, Niagara Reservation, N. Y.; John Chambers, Toronto; R. H. Warder, Chicago, and E. Baker.

This association seems to confine its work at the annual conventions to purely executive business. There are no essays and hence no discussions. Matters pertaining to the practical management of parks are discussed through the bulletins that are circulated among the members and doubtless the opinions and advice of many able men are thus given to the members, so the three days are largely devoted to viewing the parks and gardens in the vicinity where the convention meets. You can take my word for it that this is more instructive and much more impressive than an essay on this or that. Every park has some feature wanting in another; there is something to learn everywhere, or perhaps something to avoid.

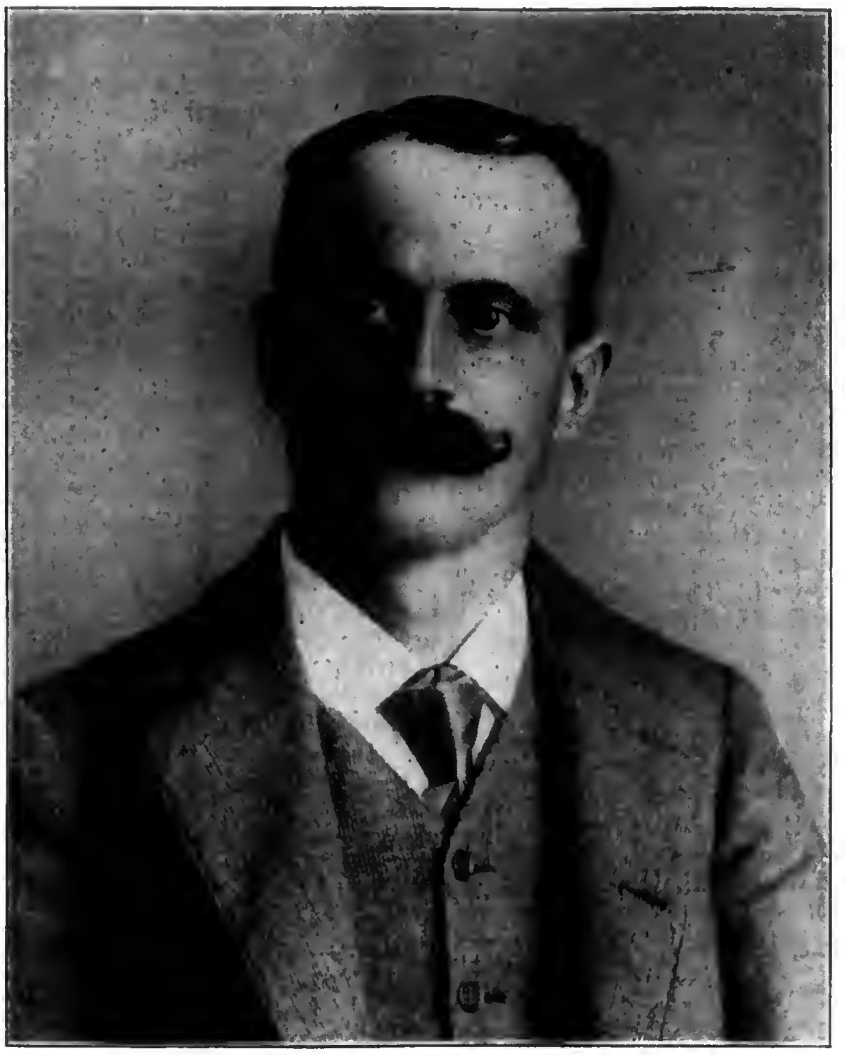
Before the business session adjourned J. Horace McFarland, of Harrisburg, Pa., president of the American League for Civic Improvement, was given the floor and made a very pleasing address, saying how near allied was the work of his society to that of the park men. "The Civic Improvement society induces cities and villages to make parks and that creates a demand for park superintendents."

After a very pleasant lunch at the Casino on our park lake, a carriage ride was taken, which covered the entire park system of the city, except South park. It was greatly enjoyed. On Thursday special cars took the visitors to Niagara Falls and under the guidance of Supt. Perry all the sights were taken in on the American side and then on the Maid of the Mist and, getting as near the Horse Shoe falls as is safe, we landed on the Canadian side and became the guests of James Wilson, superintendent of Victoria park, Ontario, and he was ably assisted by Roderic Cameron, the head gardener, to whose ability and energy the beauty and splendid condition of this park are largely due. The splendid shrubs, and particularly the herbaceous collections are worth a long journey. You ought to see the refectory in Victoria park! In architecture and unique construction it is a beauty and there we found rest and solid comfort. In lofty rooms and spacious balconies we were bountifully refreshed and Mr. Egerton did not forget to pay a tribute to the hospitality of the Canadian gentlemen.

Then a trolley ride took us the whole length of the Canadian side of the gorge and here Mr. Wilson most pleasantly enlightened us on the construction of the immense power plants on the Canadian side, which when completed will involve an investment of $20,000,000. The car crossed the Niagara on the Lewiston bridge and returned to Niagara City by the gorge route and thence to Buffalo. Few who travel at all have not seen Niagara. I am only going to say that those who only see it occasionally are always impressed with its majesty on their last visit more than any previous one. Just let me say that those young men who write articles for their journals in some large cities about the waters of Niagara being diverted and the falls destroyed by these electric power plants are talking nonsense. All the water they use is in reality but a drop in the bucket. The power houses will be fine architecturally. Supt. Perry told us it was estimated a cubic mile of water tumbled over the bank every twenty-four hours.

Friday the visitors were the guests of Prof. Cowell and spent most of the day inspecting his mammoth conservatory and the South park. The visitors greatly admired the ferns and tropical collections in the many houses under one roof, and this ended their stay in Buffalo, most of the members paying a visit to Rochester on the Saturday.

Charles E. Keith, of Bridgeport, Conn., was the wit and merrymaker of the party. He outdid that barker at Niagara.



Secretary Duncan says Niagara is wonderfully rich in its native flora. The irrigation supplied by that courtly Mr. Wilson, of Victoria park, was also pure, but rich, not a headache in a barrel of it.

John Chambers hopes he will get the association to visit Toronto very soon. Hope he will!

These park superintendents are a broad-minded set of men. Their work is diversified. What finer calling could there be when politics do not meddle with them?

The following is a list of those present:

Gustave X. Amrhyn, New Haven, Conn.; John Chambers, Toronto; Guy H. Chase, Princeton, Mass.; John F. Cowell, Buffalo; W. B. Desmarteau, Montreal; John W. Duncan, Jamaica Plain, Mass.; John Dunbar, Rochester; W. S. Egerton, Albany; M. F. Flitton, Baltimore; Henry Frost, Haverhill, Mass.; H. A. Hastings, Springfield, Mass.; Arthur Hay, Springfield, Ill.; John Henderson, Montreal; Chas. E. Keith, Bridgeport, Conn.; Isaac Kelly, Lawrence, Mass.; F. L. Mulford, Harrisburg, Pa.; A. Pinoteau, Montreal; J. B. Shea, Jamaica Plain, Mass.; R. H. Warder, Chicago; James Wilson, Niagara Falls, Ont.; Theodore Wirth, Hartford, Conn.; Byron Worthen, Manchester, N. H.; Edward H. The Market.

A good demand for festivities in connection with Harvard commencement, at which President Roosevelt and numerous other celebrities were present, strengthened last week's market, so that prices are generally lower than a week ago. Roses are not of good quality. Brides and Maids are now coming badly mildewed. Good flowers are scarce. Beauties are little changed. Carnots and Kaiserins of good quality come from a few growers. Outdoor hybrids are becoming scarce and the present week will see about the last of them. Jacqs sold unusually well last week, best quality blooms bringing as high as $8 to $12 per hundred.

Carnations have again a drooping tendency. Very fine Patten, Enchantress, Fenn and Lawson still come in. Sweet peas are coming in more freely from outdoors, but the best flowers have made 50 cents per hundred. Gladioli, coreopsis, cornflowers, feverfew, Iceland poppies and other promiscuous stock is quite plentiful. Peonies are over. Better varieties of these should be grown for our market; too many coming in have been of dull, unsalable colors.

Florists' Club Field Day.

The field day of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club at the establishment of William Sim, Cliftondale, on July 1, proved a highly successful one, about fifty members making the trip. Mr. Sim very kindly had conveyances to carry the visitors to and from the railroad depot. On arrival an inspection of the houses and outdoor crops was first in order. A few specialties only are handled here, being grown in quantity and of first-class quality.

Tomatoes occupied five houses, two of these being 200 feet, one 360 feet and the others 300 feet long. Sterling Castle, Comet and Stone are the varieties grown, the two last being preferred. The tomatoes follow crops of violets and sweet peas and all are grown to single stems and planted in the ground, there being no benches in the houses containing them. All carried a superb crop of splendid fruit. The pick of late has averaged three and a half tons a week, but this will soon be increased to a ton per day. One house of Stone Mr. Sim estimates will yield him fifteen tons. About 20,000 plants are grown under glass. A still larger number are seen outdoors. All are trained to a single stem and are already pinched. These carry a very heavy crop and picking had already commenced. The varieties chiefly grown are Earliana, Sterling Castle and Early Jewel.

Several large houses are devoted to chrysanthemums, the largest being 30x 360. Some of the kinds most largely grown are Polly Rose, Glory of Pacific, Ivory, Bonnaffon, R. Halliday, Cullingfordii, White Bonnaffon, W. Duckham, A. J. Balfour, Merstham Yellow, Henry Barnes, Harrison Dick, Mrs. Duckham, Mrs. Coombes and its white sport and Gen. Hutton. Mr. Sim follows a different procedure from most growers in the treatment of his single stems. After being rooted in the regulation manner, they are planted directly into frames which have been vacated by violets and allowed to grow there until they become stocky plants, the sashes being thrown off entirely once they are established. When transferred to their flowering quarters with nice balls they grow right ahead and are far better than if they had been confined to small pots until probably pot-bound. About 75,000 chrysanthemums are grown. Frames vacated by young stock are immediately filled with violets, which yield a heavy spring crop, when that under glass is on the wane.

Melons are being tried this season. One house and several long frames are devoted to them, American varieties being used. Other crops grown in their season are Princess of Wales violets, candytuft and sweet peas. On each of these Mr. Sim has secured almost a national reputation. Violets in the field look remarkably well. A block of the new variety, Governor Herrick, is being tried and strong hopes are centered in it. The model heating plant having been inspected, our adjournment was made to the packing room, where tables had been set with an excellent collation.

After enjoying the good things provided, Vice-president M. A. Patten, in the unavoidable absence of President Wheeler, thanked Mr. Sim for his generous hospitality and called for three cheers, which were given with a will, followed by the singing of "He's a jolly good fellow." Short addresses were made by several others present. Wm. Nicholson spoke of tomato culture twenty-two years ago, when he got $100 for 100 pounds of tomatoes on July 3 in the Boston market, as compared with 10 cents per pound today. He sold fruit for $2.75 per pound for several weeks during the winter of 1882-3. Other speakers were Peter Fisher, T. J. Grey, W. N. Craig, Thomas Roland, W. C. Stickel and Alex Montgomery, Jr. Every one united in commending Mr. Sim for the beautiful plant he had built after a very uphill fight against hard luck and praised the high quality of the stock seen and the cleanliness which everywhere prevailed. The Cliftondale field day will remain a pleasant memory for all who enjoyed it.

Various Notes.

Schnyder & Co. have recently purchased sixty acres of land in Waban. They will build seven houses 100 feet long to be devoted chiefly to azaleas and bulbous stock. Mr. Schnyder was formerly with Mrs. David Fisher, of Montvale, Mass.

Several of the craft led blushing brides to the altar the past week. J. J. Cassidy, of Doyle's Boylston street store, was married to Miss Margaret Grace Mitchell at Dorchester on June 29. The same day Clinton Gibbs, of the firm of Gibbs Bros., Lynn, was married to Miss Rhodes, also of Lynn. On June 28 Frank J. Delanskey, one of the stall-holders at the Park street market, and who also operates a store in Lynn, was married to Miss Mary Elizabeth Power.

John Walsh, the esteemed manager of the Park street flower market, left on July 3 for a three weeks' vacation to be spent chiefly in and about St. John's, New Brunswick.

William H. Elliott found Safrano his best paying rose the past season. He has a climbing sport from Mrs. Oliver Ames which he thinks well of. Mr. Elliott's family is at present in Madbury, N. H., where he has a summer residence on his 200-acre farm, on which is located his rose house 54x840. He considers the weekly journey between Brighton and Madbury as a fine relaxation.

Thomas Pegler sailed for Europe last week. Departures this week include A. Leuthy, J. A. Pettigrew and George C. Harbison, foreman for W. H. Elliott, at Brighton.

E. N. Peirce & Co., of Waltham, are building two new carnation houses 30x 300 in place of two old sash houses. Benches will be of cement and tiles, each five feet wide. They are also installing two powerful new steam boilers.

William Spillsbury will locate on his new place about October 1. He owns twelve acres of land in Reading and already has one house 30x200 which at present carries a heavy crop of cucumbers, but will later be devoted to single violets.

Everything has been cleaned up in good shape except a few Nutt geraniums. We shall have a new adv. soon.

STOVER FLORAL CO.

Grandville, Mich., July 3, 1905.

Brown tail and gypsy moth caterpillars are getting in their work with a vengeance now. Great tracts of woodland are entirely destitute of foliage. So bad are the pests in some sections that pedestrians almost slide over the ground, which is swarming with them. Some parasites have recently arrived from Japan and it is hoped will in time help to reduce their numbers. Poisoning caused by hairs from the brown tail caterpillars is very prevalent all over the infested districts.

Peter Fisher states that cut worms were unusually destructive among his carnations this season. He finds a mixture of shorts and Paris green, sweetened and dampened by molasses and water and squeezed into little chunks, very effective as a poison.

George Sibthorpe, of Wellesley, recently opened a flower store in that town and reports sales as very satisfactory.

Increasing interest is being taken in the Gardeners' and Florists' Club picnic to be held on July 25, at Randolph Grove, and a very large attendance is assured.

Galvin had some choice designs for the late secretary of state, John Hay, this week, one order for a choice orchid wreath coming by cable from the American embassy in St. Petersburg.

The New Bedford Horticultural Society will make an exhibit of 300 varieties of dahlias at the September show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, to show what an advance has been made in their culture in that city.

John K. Alexander, of East Bridgewater, one of the largest of the Massachusetts dahlia specialists, has 100,000 plants in over 600 varieties in the field, including many new sorts from England.

We enjoyed fine seasonable weather on the great and glorious Fourth and have not yet heard of any casualties to members of the craft from celebrating.

Something in the nature of a tornado struck this vicinity June 26 and three-quarters of an inch of rain fell in ten minutes. Hail did some damage to greenhouses. At Wakefield Samuel T. Parker lost several hundred panes of glass and others were hard hit.

J. B. Velie, Boston representative of the Lord & Burnham Co., was married to Miss Janet M. Hunter, of Irvington-on-Hudson, on June 21. They will make their home in Somerville. W. N. Craig.

Club Visits Toledo.

On June 29 the Detroit Florists' Club to the number of twenty-seven boarded a special car to pay a friendly visit to the craft in Toledo, O., a suburb of Detroit, sixty miles distant. The car was stocked with the necessary material for irrigation and fumigation and the time was spent in playing cards, Mr. Dilger being the best-natured loser. On our arrival the car was met by a delegation of the Toledo florists and our party taken to the Farm, where an elaborate repast was spread for our refreshment. The decorations were in keeping with the viands. As soon as cigars and coffee were reached Mr. Heinl called on Mr. Bayer, of Toledo, to act as toastmaster for the occasion, which position he filled with much credit to himself. Mr. Watson, president of the Detroit club, in a very neat speech thanked the florists of Toledo for the courtesies extended. Mr. Sullivan, secretary of the club, urged the formation of a club in Toledo as tending to bring about a more friendly feeling among the members of the craft and urged a large attendance at the convention of the S. A. F. in Washington.

The party then walked to the greenhouses of Mr. Heinl, where they found everything looking fine, the planting of roses being under way with all the soil sterilized. A field of carnations of 30,000 plants, all healthy and large for this time of year, was a beautiful sight. Mr. Heinl is erecting cement benches to replace the wooden ones as fast as possible. Here the party divided, a part returning to the Farm, where a match game was bowled between Detroit and Toledo, five men on a side, and for the first time in history Detroit won by 95 pins. The non-bowlers visited the large plant of George Bayer, constructed on the Dietsch plan, and found his houses full of carnations and tomatoes, with 50,000 chrysanthemum plants outside to replace the tomatoes. A visit was made to Krueger Bros. and also Davis & Magee, after which the party was transferred across the city to Walbridge park, where Mr. Zirhus, the genial superintendent, took us in charge, showing us through the greenhouses, containing many valuable tropical specimens. A lunch was served here under the shade of the trees, to which ample justice was done. A trip in a steam launch up the beautiful Maumee river for four or five miles was much enjoyed. All returned to the Farm, where good-byes were said and an invitation extended the Toledo brothers to return the visit and a most enjoyable day was ended and the party left for Detroit at 10 p. m.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The last week of June was one of the most satisfactory of the spring season, for business continued quite active up to the very last day of the month. The city florists had a good many weddings and a great deal of funeral work and the call from out of town was all that it ever is at this season. The result was that the peony crop has cleaned up equal to the expectations of the most sanguine and better than many wholesalers thought possible. There are only a few hundred dozens left. They are all in good shape and prices have been stiffened to make the supply last for a few days longer.

Beginning July 1 there was a break to the summer level. Business has been very quiet, as was to have been expected. Saturday is never an active day in the summer, there is little doing Sunday, Monday was the day before the Fourth and on the nation's natal day the florists all go to the picnic. Wednesday morning saw a little business stirring, but not more than enough to create a ripple on the surface of the market.

With the first of the week receipts of roses increased materially and there are more than adequate supplies, quality averaging quite up to the best that might be expected of July. The buds are not large, but the color is good and so is the substance. Foliage is clean with most growers. Kaiserin commands the best price, Liberty next, Brides and Maids weak in price and Chatenay at the foot of the list.

Carnations are also in increased supply and selling at very low prices. Quality is very good and the growers are slower to throw out the old stock than had been expected. The call for funeral work has made a fair market for the lilies and also for the lighter colored odds and ends of outdoor stock. Dahlias are arriving in limited quantity. The supply of sweet peas is something tremendous and no profitable market can be found for other than the extra select bunches. The outlet for "green goods" has been closed since the end of the month and prices are at a very low level.

Will Ask a Rebate.

The Chicago Wholesale Florists' Association, which took care of the teaming interests while the express companies were tied up, has been perpetuated for the general good and one of the first efforts will be to induce the express companies to refund all or a part of the $841.60 expended in making the pick-ups which the express companies usually do without cost to shippers. Express officials have stated to wholesalers that the cost of the pick-up service is 32 cents a package, incredible as it may seem. The cost to the Wholesalers' Association was only a little over 11 cents, so that, so the wholesalers say, the companies will be really saving money by paying the bill!

Various Notes.

P. J. Hauswirth had the decoration for a dinner to 750 homeopathic physicians at the Auditorium June 30. But he made the decoration on the allopathic principle, stock being cheap.

The funeral of Graeme Stewart on June 29 bought out one of the largest floral displays ever seen in the city. All the leading retailers had a share.

It is something surprising the way George Reinberg's cut is keeping up this summer after the big crops of the winter.

Mrs. Horton, of Bassett & Washburn, is spending the week at Tomahawk Lake, Wis.

There was a very good attendance at the special club meeting last Friday evening. Some of the members will make an expedition to Milwaukee this evening for the purpose of stimulating the convention enthusiasm there.

Charles Erne, of E. H. Hunt's, is at Terre Haute, his old home, for a vacation. Miss Lillie Tonner, who has charge of the supply department at Hunt's, leaves Saturday for a trip to the Portland exposition.

P. J. Hauswirth goes to Buffalo Saturday for the Elk's gathering.

One of the week's visitors was J. L. Dillon, of Bloomsburg, Pa., on his way to New Mexico, where he has interests.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Considering the season, trade in the florists' line has been fairly good the past week and about the only complaint we have to make just now is of the quality of stock that is coming in. Funeral work is about all that is going on among the local retailers, but it kept some of us rather busy the past week. The supply of roses seems to have shortened still further. Fancy grades in these are hard to obtain. A few good long Beauties are still obtainable. Short stock is plentiful. There are very few fancy carnations in the market, which command $2 per hundred. Clean-up sales at a few cents below the regular market prices are quite frequent of late, leaving nothing over for afternoon trade. The recent heavy rains have spoiled a great many sweet peas and other outdoor stock.

Interviewing several of the leading retailers the past week, they report the season as a whole very satisfactory from their standpoint. Some of the growers, though, are not so well satisfied with the prices they received for their consignments. The wholesalers say that good stock, which came in good shape, always brought good figures during the season.

Various Notes.

The trustees of the Florists' Club are working hard to make the annual picnic a big success. The place has not yet been selected. Several places are under consideration. The date and place will be announced at the club meeting next Thursday afternoon.

Some of the members of the bowling club are bowling twice a week now, so as to be in first-class trim for the Washington tournament. As it looks now some of our best bowlers will not be able to make the trip, so the make-up of the team, as it looks at the present time, will be C. A. Kuehn, F. C. Weber, Theo. Miller, Fred H. Meinhardt and J. J. Beneke, with Henry Lohrenz as extra man.

Friends of Messrs. Weber and Miller have received letters that both arrived safely in Germany and are enjoying the best of health. Both are looking forward to meeting a large delegation at Washington in August.

The Growers' Club held a special meeting at the Michel Co.'s office on last Wednesday night with a fair attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. William Ellison and their daughter left last week to spend the summer at the northern lakes.

The Eden Floral Co., at Eighteenth and Olive streets, has closed up and sold the fixtures.

Mr. Hibbert, of the Hibbert Floral Co., De Soto, Mo., paid us a visit on Monday and bowled with the boys in the evening. J. J. B.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Summer is here, with all it means to the retailers. Everything has that July look we all know so well. The help in the stores are taking vacations and those who are left do not seem to have very much to do. Stock is in the usual summer condition. Maids and Brides show the heat, but Kaiserins and Beauties are good, so that it is not necessary to turn down any orders. Lilies have become quite scarce in this market; good ones are bringing $15 per hundred.

Various Notes.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is handling some very fine Beauties, Kaiserins and valley and says that, while the retailers complain of nothing to do, they find trade very good for the time of the year.

The Pittsburg Florists' Exchange was compelled to vacate its store in a hurry last Saturday. In excavating for a new building next to them the foundation of their building, which was a very old one, was weakened, and the building inspector ordered them out. Fortunately there was a vacant store directly opposite, into which they moved, and are now ready for business as usual.

Ben Elliott, who went to California, is established in the feed and fuel business in Los Angeles. His many friends wish him success.

The Botanical Society of Western Pennsylvania has taken to the woods with the botanists from New York, Philadelphia and Washington. The meeting and start were at Ohio Pyle on July 5.

Club Outing.

The prospects are that the outing July 12 will be the best attended in the history of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club. The boat leaves the foot of Market street at 8:30 a. m. Everybody is going. The program includes twenty-six "events," principally races, but including a tug of war, baseball game, etc. There are prizes enough so that every one should get some sort of a souvenir, ranging from ladies' handkerchiefs to registering thermometers and including two watches. The donors are Fred Burki, E. C. Ludwig, Fred Ruch, John Bader, Christ Rieger, G. Ludwig, Jos. Jones, The Pittsburg Florists' Exchange, H. L. Blind & Bro., J. W. Ludwig, W. C. Beckert, The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., T. P. Langhans, Dimling Bros., Bernard Gloeck, Breitenstein & Flemm, W. A. Clarke, L. I. Neff, Geddis & Blind Bros., H. C. Buechler, E. Zieger, H. Bayersdorfer & Co., P. S. Randolph & Co. and others. The judges are to be H. L. Blind and T. P. Langhans.

Hoo-Hoo.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The last week of June in the wholesale market was the best one of the month and up to Saturday prices were quite generally satisfactory. The closing of the schools on Friday was clearly demonstrated by a dull Saturday and no little grumbling could be heard at the advent of the two months of expected but unwelcome summer depression. There will be little else to report as to market conditions from now until September.

Roses and carnations all last week were strong and the demand excellent. There was little to complain of. Orchids hold steadily at 75 cents for the best Cattleya gigas, of which variety McManus carries a grand stock.

Various Notes.

Young & Nugent have retained their front window space for palm display, over their store on the ground floor, and Phil Kessler opened Monday of this week his wholesale place in the center of the room, his ice-box being in place. Mr. Nugent's private office is in the rear and is handsomely fitted up for the house warming.

Announcement is made of the $50,000 capitalization of the Thos. Young, Jr., corporation, with Messrs. Sharkey, Susanson and McAniney as directors.

Amelia, daughter of Chas. Koch, of Flatbush, was married last Wednesday to Clarence Brown. Another Clarence in the horticultural section is reported to have similar ambitions.

C. Wayne Ward, of Ralph M. Ward & Co., has completed his season's travel and is now summering at Asbury Park.

Nick Schreiner, of J. K. Allen's force is spending a few weeks at Cairo, in the Catskills, with his wife.

Jack Gunther and family leave shortly for their usual warm weather residence at Far Rockaway.

J. Henry Thomas, representing R. M. Ward & Co., sailed last Saturday on the Philadelphia, for a business trip in Europe and will, while abroad, attend to the firm's shipments and importations.

Several of the seedsmen contemplate a trip to the Portland exposition in August. This may prevent the attendance of some of the S. A. F. celebrities.

Interest grows in the Washington convention. There will be a big attendance from New York. The stopover at Philadelphia for lunch will be a pleasant interlude. There is a rumor that Cincinnati wants the society in 1906. She has been waiting patiently a long time. Brother Gillett's invitation speech will be a masterpiece, something like the one that swept us to Asheville. Only a little more than a month before the yearly reunion materializes.

One of the coming places, with beautiful landscape effects, and unique plantings is that of S. R. Guggenheim, of the Lakeside Gardens, Elberon, N. J., where 30,000 square feet of glass and thirty acres of land give opportunity for effective work. Herbert Hall is the gardener in charge. He is a young man of fine ability, a graduate of the Royal Botanical Gardens of Edinburgh, Scotland, where he had charge of the experimental department. He also mastered the nursery business and private gardening at two of the best private places in the north of England, and was for twelve months in charge at Greystone on the Hudson.

Jas. Fraser, superintendent of Cedar Court, Morristown, N. J., sailed last week for Europe.

The Outing.

The club's outing, as stated in last week's issue, was a great success. A record attendance—nearly 300—and a perfect day made the occasion memorable. One of the young lady runners dislocated her knee in a fall on the primitive running field. Her friends will be pleased to know permanent lameness has been avoided, and the kindness of all her fellow voyagers was much appreciated. The facilities for athletics were not equal to last year's but the enjoyment of all on the boat was complete and prize distributions and dancing, with an abundance of refreshments, made the sail home a delight to all.

It is more than likely the desire for novelty and the necessity for a good square meal may lead the club to Glen Island or New Dorp next year. Otherwise Wetzel's, with its fine table service and proper sporting facilities, will doubtless again be chosen, and a later date set, so that the closing of the schools may not again interfere with the attendance. Had the outing been held early in July there would have been over 400 there. Louis Schmutz secured first honors for family representation with an even dozen, but Mr. Moore, of Moore, Hentz & Nash did nobly with a family of seven. It was a most harmonious and representative gathering, by far the best in number and interest in the club's history.

John G. Esler made a grand run in the old men's race and was only beaten by a nose. He had some very interesting hailstones on tap and is enthusiastic over the success of his organization.

Louis Schmutz, Jr., and his brothers managed the ladies' bowling and had their hands full all the afternoon, missing the entire program of sports in their devotion to the fair sex. Burns, Bunyard and Langjahr were field managers, with the president as general overseer. Too many "events," as usual, left little time for enjoyment of the beautiful grounds. Over $300 worth of handsome prizes were given, including silver tea sets, pitchers, candelabra, watches, gold-headed canes, cameras and dozens of articles dear to the hearts of the ladies.

The most interesting event was the lottery race of Cleary's and the suit of clothes was won by Mr. Dreyer, whose luck has been running strong for over a year.

Harry Bunyard and his force of judges had a hard time deciding the baby prize. They were all beautiful! The babies, not the judges.

The single men played poor ball, and were easily defeated.

Ladies' bowling match, Mesdames A. L. Miller, Jaeck, Torberg, A. Gaynor, Whitman, Schmutz, Jr., Miss Whitman, Lentz, A. Smith, Yocke, Crevelling, Donaldson, Rue, M. Crevelling, A. Schmutz, in order named.

The Market.

The market has features despite July and the great national holiday. There has been a pronounced demand for Beauties of good quality, met by an unusually choice supply, the Leo Niessen Co. having plenty of flowers of this fine rose that are up to winter form. Kaiserins and valley have also come in for a share of the demand. There are a few fine Maids, Brides, Carnots and Chatenays about, while Liberty from several growers is excellent. Carnations have shortened up considerably. Reid is getting some nice ones, while S. S. Pennock's Lawson, Queen and Queen Louise from "down east" are fine. Sweet peas of good quality are selling a little better than a fortnight ago, but the quantity of presentable flowers is much reduced. Asters are not a factor yet. The stores do not care for the small, early ones. Peonies can still be had in quantity. The Flower Market is handling the bulk of the cold storage stock and say they can fill an order for several thousands. S. S. Pennock has some that he has kept in storage at his own place. Candidum lilies are over, but fine Harrisii can be had, both at the Flower Market and S. S. Pennock's. Iris and coreopsis are abundant. Business in cut flowers, plants, seeds and florists' supplies is above the average at this season.

Various Notes.

Henry A. Dreer put an effective aquatic display in the window with their perennials on Wednesday. George Parsons states that the demand for seeds of the various varieties of digitalis, delphiniums and other hardy biennials and perennials has been far in excess of previous years.

Visitors at 1220 Race street are attracted by the steadfast gaze which Uncle Theodore and his companion, Billy, fix on the new gallery over the office where the screens are displayed. Uncle Theodore is not Mr. Rice's uncle, neither is he Mr. Eschner's, but they call him Uncle Theodore from courtesy. He has only come to this country lately; a most interesting personality.

H. H. Battles has added the store at 110 S. Twelfth street to the famous 108. Mechanics are busily at work turning it into a modern shop. The partition is down, the gallery will be extended, the show window arranged so that it will make a harmonious whole.

Charles F. Krueger has leased his greenhouses at Narberth, Pa., to David Emery, formerly a private gardener. The stock of plants, tools, etc., was purchased by him at the same time, their value being appraised by Robert Craig and C. E. Meehan.

The Finley Acker Co. will open a flower shop in connection with their "Quality store" at Twelfth and Chestnut streets about July 15. This department will be in charge of Mrs. Moore, widow of a former Trenton florist.

Ernest Wannemacher will have a conservatory adjoining his store at Overbrook, Pa., using Lord & Burnham material.

William Linden, backed by a silent partner, has leased the greenhouses and store at Mount Airy, successively operated by Lewis Billger & Son, Billger & Blakeborough, Colflesh & Whittemore and Morris Myers.

William E. McKissick has withdrawn from the Leo Niessen Co.

G. L. Huscroft, of Steubenville, O., was a visitor this week.

J. A. Smith, the popular representative of the H. F. Michell Co., is away on his vacation this week.

Henry Diehl has succeeded David Emery at Judge Wiltbank's. Mr. Diehl has an enviable reputation as a skillful grower. Curiously enough his present place is next door to the one he held for so many years at the late Edward T. Steel's.

John Savage has vacated his greenhouses at Mount Airy.

Reading G. Palmer wishes to dispose of his house and two greenhouses at Doylestown, Pa.

Paul Berkowitz is too busy to take a holiday at present, but will join his family in the mountains near Altoona over Sundays.

Charles E. Meehan and Mrs. Meehan spent last Sunday very happily in New York, where they went for a visit. Somehow J. Austin Shaw missed them. I can't exactly explain it.

Two Bostonians, Messrs. Leuthy and O'Brien, were here recently, visiting Dreer, Harris, et al. The former has gone abroad. The latter has returned to the Hub.

D. T. Conner has accepted an order for greenhouse material from a West Philadelphia man, whose name I can't recall. I remember very distinctly, however, that he is going to use wire glass, his own make!

H. Bayersdorfer expects to sail from Antwerp in the Zealand July 15.

Mark Reeves has been appointed administrator of his father's estate. He will, under the insolvency laws, have one year in which to settle with the creditors.

Clarence J. Watson is in command during S. S. Pennock's absence in Westerly over the Fourth.

L. Reuter, son of S. J. Reuter, has leased the Bunting greenhouses.

F. & H. Mergenthaler will add some carnation houses connecting with their stock house. Work is progressing rapidly.

A greenhouse on top of a coal mine is the latest novelty. Neither this nor the triple alliance can faze D. T. C.

M. Rice is busily engaged on his new catalogue. He says "the most complete supply house will send out the finest catalogue ever seen."

George Anderson is sending some nice Carnots to Pennock Bros. The Anderson farm at Garrettsford has been sold. It is thought the greenhouses will be taken down.

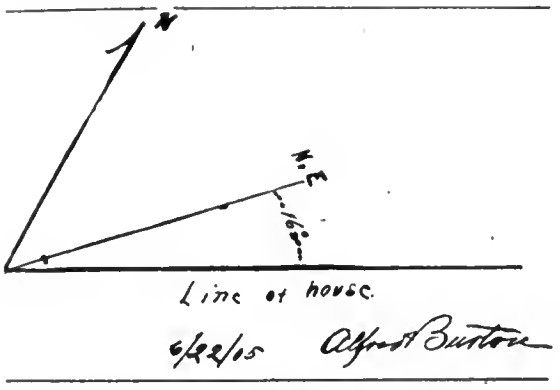
B. Eschner and Mrs. Eschner were away over the Fourth.



G. C. Watson disapproved the paragraph that appeared in this column last week, to the effect that now that he has "absolved S. S. Pennock from the charge of being a loafer others may hope." This was intended to be taken in a Pickwickian sense, a note of approval to Mr. Watson's cracker-box story. Should I desire to describe a very hard working man I would say he works as hard as S. S. Pennock. Should I desire to describe a clever writer I would say his style reminds me of Geo. C. Watson.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

It is announced that Leonard H. Vaughan, of Chicago, is to be married July 17.

The first Harrisii are due this week but the main early shipment is expected on the boat leaving Bermuda July 14.

R. J. Reifel, of the Rocky Ford Hardware Co., Rocky Ford, Colo., was a recent visitor at Chicago. He reports that the melon crops of Rocky Ford look well and that a good crop of seed is expected by the Rocky Ford seed growers.

Fort Worth, Tex.—The American Seed Co. is a new corporation here. The company intends to do a wholesale seed business. The capital stock is $10,000. The incorporators are A. E. Bell, F. M. Bell, M. A. Benton, T. W. Sabatt, all of Fort Worth.

The onion set harvest at all points will be begun two weeks earlier this year than last. This is owing to the earlier spring this year. The fact that an early harvest insures a good, sound, long-keeping bulb will be good news to those who buy in the fall and sell in the spring.

The week's reports show no improvement in the bean situation. Quite a number of farmers have sent in word that their ground was not in shape to plant at the time beans should have gone in and many acres that were to have been sown to beans will be taken up with some other crop.

THE LONDON LETTER.

Bright, sunny and warm weather is causing a rise in the spirits of the English seed growers. Many flowers are now rapidly making for harvesting, while the larger crops, peas, beans, turnips, cabbages, onions, mangels and beets, are all improving under the changes in the weather. There should be good yields of wallflower seeds, Honesty, oriental and Iceland poppies, etc., while the rosy tinted aubrietias, such as Leichtlini, which gave but poor crops during the past two years, certainly show greater promise.

Those who, as a precaution against the weather and other causes which lead to failure, grow their blue primroses for seed in cold frames, are now harvesting the seed, though the harvest is, as is customary, a small one. On slightly raised and rather dry lands the blue primrose will succeed in the open. On heavy lands, especially if retentive of moisture, many of the plants die in the winter. There is a certain delicacy of constitution about it, and yet, in semi-wild places, where there is a good deal of coolness and shade and helped by a surfacing of decaying leaves which fall from trees and shrubs, the blue primrose will flourish as freely as the common yellow. But there is always danger of degeneration. A collection of plants for seeds must be kept up to date.

June and July bring a period of quiet in the wholesale seed trade, though orders will soon be brisk for cabbages, onions and especially the Tripoli section; cauliflower, lettuce, etc., which are sown in July and August. At this period of the year contract seeds of mangel, swede and common field turnips, etc., are prepared. Some of the older of the permanent hands make paper bags and such of the women as are retained make canvas bags. The young men are sent to the trial grounds and find a beneficial change; besides, if willing to learn, they can pick up many scraps of useful information and so fit themselves for higher services.

The premature bolting of cabbages is a subject which is just now occupying a good deal of the attention of seed growers and gardeners. It comes as a disappointment to both to have the plants bolting when they should be forming compact hearts. It is to be feared that some seed growers, fearing a scarcity, allow the bolters to seed, and in this way encourage the tendency. Much can be done in the way of selecting the proper sorts, sowing at the proper time and seeding from the long standing types. Seed growers sometimes institute trials and have the results made public, but it can be noticed that their own specialties are invariably to the fore. The Royal Horticultural Society, at the new garden at Wisley, should enter upon a comprehensive trial of cabbages, but it should extend at least over three years. It is to be hoped the society may be induced to carry out such a trial in the near future.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The past week was a very quiet one, outdoor flowers superseding in a great measure those grown indoors and the poor quality of roses being one of the causes. Carnations, especially white, are in good condition and sell fairly well. Lawson is not in as good a form as formerly, caused by the excessive heat. Prosperity is very good. Beauties have almost disappeared. What are coming in are of very poor quality. Chatenay is fairly good, but Brides and Maids are very small and are used only in funeral work. Golden Gates are very seldom seen now. Sweet peas, coreopsis, in fact all outdoor stuff is here in over-abundance and prices are as low as can possibly be. Trade is gradually falling off and it will be only a matter of a couple of weeks when we can take our vacation.

Various Notes.

Some very fine mums have been planted by some of the growers and if the trade this fall can be gaged by the amount planted there will be an immense business.

W. J. Barnes is deep in work these days. He has a very large amount of room given over to chrysanthemums and all are doing well.

R. S. Brown & Sons are the only growers now sending in good roses. Although short-stemmed, the buds are large and of good color.

Ed. Bunyar, of Independence, is sending in some of the finest sweet peas on the market and is finding a ready market for plant stock.

D. Freudenthal did a large amount of funeral work last week, having all he could do to handle it, also some large orders for wedding decorations.

Nelson Jarrett has the finest Begonia Rex to be seen in Kansas City and has a large collection which he is bringing on for the flower show this fall.

John M. Fitch, of Erie, Kan., with the Barteldes Seed Co., of Lawrence, was a visitor here last week. Mr. Fitch intends to build a range of houses at his home town and intends to enter the wholesale market with a general line.

We understand a new firm has taken the range of houses formerly occupied by John Vesey. We are not acquainted with the members of the firm and as yet cannot fully state what their line will be.

C. A. Doty, of 1125 Main street, has opened one of the finest cut flower establishments in this city and will carry a full line of all that is needed to handle retail trade. Mr. Doty had a grand opening last Thursday, when he gave away over 4,000 carnations to his friends. We bespeak for him a large share of the business.

Mrs. Beiderman, out on Prospect street, is sending in some fine Shasta daisies and reports a very satisfactory business the past season. Narcissus.

NEW CASTLE, PA.

Many window glass factories from the Indiana natural gas district are returning to this vicinity because of the failure of the gas, which took them west several years ago. The American Window Glass Co. is preparing to reopen the Lawrence and Shenango plants with machine blowers. These were purchased by the trust and closed down. During the time they were operated they employed 1,500 men, and the claim has been made by agents for the American company that when they are fully equipped with the "iron man," as the machine blower is called, fully 2,000 men will be employed.

It is expected that the work of equipping the factories with the machine will be started during July and that when the September fire is started they will be ready to operate.

It is the general opinion among glass men in the Pittsburg district that practically all of the big factories now located in Indiana will be brought back to this end of Pennsylvania, as the gas supply has almost entirely failed in the western state.

NORWICH, CONN.

The rose show of the New London County Horticultural Society June 21 and 22 was a great success. The armory was handsomely decorated and was well filled with exhibits, nearly all of which consisted of garden roses grown by the many private gardeners and amateur florists of the neighborhood. The principal trade displays were of orchids and decorative plants, staged by Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. J., and Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J.

Mobile, Ala.—Capt. F. P. Davis has in his new carnation range, one of the finest greenhouses in the south; iron construction; solid beds. Business is dull but all stock is scarce and good carnations sell well.

Araucaria Excelsa
OUR SPECIALITY.

Fill your empty houses now and make 100 per cent on your money while you sleep. Notice—When you undertake anything, do it well or not at all. This is our motto adopted 10 years ago when we imported the first lot of this well known pot plant, the Araucaria Excelsa from Belgium.

These everlasting green foliaged pot plants are growing more in favor by the tasteful plant buyers of this land from year to year. Please watch the growth of our importation during the last 10 years: first year 100, second 250, third 500, fourth 1000, fifth 2,000. This year (1905) which is the 10th anniversary of our first importation, our spring importation amounted to 5,000. All these are grown for us under contract by an Araucaria specialist in Belgium. I must say for the benefit of my customers that they were never before so nice and large for the money as this year. I herewith quote you special prices on these.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business continues much the same as last week. It is easily as good as last year, if not a little better. The weather conditions this spring have held the quality of stock much better than is usual and of course that is a great help. Several good-sized wedding decorations used up considerable stock.

Roses and carnations are about in the same condition as they were last week. Beauty is in larger supply and sells well, but the price is not high. Gate, Ivory and Kaiserin are in fairly good form. The carnations shipped from Michigan are the best now. Sweet peas are in better supply. Other outdoor flowers in season are in good supply. Some very good gladioli are in. Water lilies and poppies sell well. "Green goods" are plentiful, also very nice eastern ferns.

Club Outing.

On June 29 the long looked forward to picnic for the florists was given by George & Allan and D. Rusconi. To say that it was a success would be putting it mildly. It was an occasion long to be remembered by all who were lucky enough to be present, and they numbered close to 300. The fun started at two o'clock, when the ball game was called. They lined up nine growers and nine storemen. It was a battle royal and, after pulling themselves out of many close places, the growers won to the tune of 11 to 5. The feature of the game was the pitching on both sides and the fielding of R. A. Murphy and J. R. Rodgers. At the same time there were bowling matches in progress, also quoit pitching contests for both the men and ladies.

At three o'clock the meeting of the Florists' Society was called to order by President Ben George and the annual election resulted in the choice of Ben George, R. Witterstaetter, D. Rusconi, Wm. Murphy and C. J. Ohmer as members of the board. There was a very lively contest between Wm. Murphy and H. Konzelman, they being tie for place on the board. It required three ballots to decide the winner. It was decided not to hold an outing this year.

At six o'clock supper was served. Mr. Rusconi did himself proud and his Italian dishes were highly praised by every one. His imported wine especially found great favor. Neat speeches were made by Ben George and Mr. Rusconi. After the repast a brass band made its appearance and dancing was in order. A rousing vote of thanks was given to George & Allan and Mr. Rusconi for their hospitality.

H. M. Altick, of Dayton, O., came down to attend the picnic and had many good things to say about the hospitality of the Cincinnati florists.

Various Notes.

The rapidly approaching convention of the S. A. F. is the main topic for discussion at present. While I do not believe that there will be a very large delegation from this city, yet the regulars will be on hand. At present it looks as if all the florists north, west and south of us will meet here and proceed on a special train. E. G. Gillett is now corresponding with the boys at Chicago. The St. Louis boys have already decided to come our way.

Julius Baer, of this city, and J. Lodder & Son, of Hamilton, had the Neal-Bauer wedding in the latter city, which was one of the largest decorations Hamilton has seen for a long time.

Tom Hardesty has been on the sick list but is again at the store.

H. M. Altick, of Dayton, is receiving congratulations. It's a boy, and he is as tickled as if it were No. 1 instead of No. 6.

Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Ruttle, of Covington, Ky., are going to Buffalo to attend the Elks' convention.

Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Benson are going to Riverton, N. J., for an outing and will be at Washington for the convention.

Miss Cronin, of Covington, Ky., has moved across the street and is fixing up a new store at 15 Fifth street.

S. S. Skidelsky was a caller.

C. J. Ohmer.

Cedar Falls, Ia.—Joseph Bancroft & Son are building a new and larger office adjoining their greenhouses and fronting on Twelfth street. The old structure had served for twenty-five years but was long since outgrown.

THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

NOW IS THE TIME TO BEGIN!

PACIFIC COAST.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Clarence Wedge, the nurseryman of Albert Lea, Minn., is here with his bride, doing the exposition.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Various Jottings.

The demand for flowers has been very heavy for the past two weeks. High school commencements cleaned up all good stock and, would you believe it, one of the sweet girl graduates carried green carnations! The graduation of hospital nurses was another big event, and funeral orders have been very large.

The outdoor roses are waning a little but as all roses are hardy here, including the teas, there is a good show of flowers all the season. It seems to be a fad and many compete to own the most varieties of roses, a very nice thing for the florists and nurserymen.

Dahlias are now blooming profusely, not the small divided tubers, with two or three stalks you see in the east, but great big clumps, four to six feet across, that have been left outdoors for three or four years. They are entirely hardy here and do not need to be lifted and stored over winter, except on low ground, where they are liable to rot.

The organization of a syndicate to grow cut flowers is the latest thing. What is known as the Prentice property, a very rich ten-acre tract at South Park, will probably be secured on which to erect a very large range of glass. The plans are yet not fully matured but the project will doubtless go through.

Carnations in the field are growing nicely, several nice warm rains having helped them.

The weather is keeping up its summer record; daytime 75 degrees and nights about 60 degrees. No sweating, filling benches here.

Mike Lewis has taken a position at the Washington Floral Co.

J. J. Bonnell has bought the glass for two houses 20x100 and will erect them during the summer.

The Pacific Floral Co. has received notice to vacate its store as a new building is to be erected. They have already leased a room in the new building.

J. G. Hopkins, the florist in the Hinckley block, has been appointed fruit inspector at a fat salary. A. B.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather has turned cold again and it is having a good effect on flowers in general. Carnations and roses that generally at this season of the year have poor color and weak stems, are now in as fine form and substance as though it were four months later. Not that there is any demand to speak of, but it enables the retailers to keep up a good appearance with little effort. Sweet peas are getting short of stem in most places and it is between seasons with them. The later pickings are not being brought in yet. Gladioli are in evidence everywhere and are good sellers, considering that they are a cheap flower. They are indispensable for window displays. Coreopsis, gaillardias and cornflowers are handled in large quantities by the hucksters and variegated dahlias are being offered by the growers in large lots. The small white double variety is really the only kind of much value to the florist and they are used at present in large quantities in funeral designs. Valley is in short supply and also short demand and the same can be said of longiflorum lilies.

Various Notes.

J. T. Shepherd, of Oakland, has retired from the florists' business. He has disposed of his stock and fixtures and will embark in a mining enterprise.

F. de Surville has taken charge of the I. W. Hellman's place on Lake Tahoe.

The chrysanthemum growers are having extra favorable weather at present for their outdoor stock, and, from indications, we will have a big supply of this popular flower.

The gardens at Sutro Heights are now at their best and reflect great credit on P. J. Murphy and his assistants.

E. W. McLellan has returned from his trip through the northern part of the state, where he had a very pleasant outing for a few days.

Mrs. Maria Becanne, wife of John Becanne, the pioneer Alameda florist, died on June 25 and was buried in St. Mary's cemetery, Oakland, on June 28. Mrs. Becanne was 53 years of age and had resided in Alameda over thirty years. G.

A NEW PHARASITE.

There arrived from Japan this week, on the steamer Manchuria, a box of insects consigned to the Department of Agriculture in Massachusetts. For some time past that portion of the country has been troubled with caterpillars that have been doing much damage to vegetation and the department at Washington sent out inquiries throughout the world for a parasite that would exterminate this particular moth and caterpillar. United States Minister Griscom, of Tokio, has sent such an insect and it is said to be sure death to the so-called gypsy moth. They are like ants in appearance, but have four wings, with the aid of which they hop around like fleas. They sting the caterpillars to death and, according to Minister Griscom, their larvae, which are eagerly consumed by caterpillars, hatch out inside of the caterpillars and destroy their consumers, so that they work from both ends, as it were.

But Alexander Craw, our horticultural commissioner, claims that the parasites just imported from Japan are about as dangerous to vegetation, if left to themselves, as is the gypsy moth, and the greatest precautions have been taken to get them into this country and get them started toward Massachusetts without any of the insects escaping, for if they should escape and multiply here without having their natural enemy to feed on they would probably soon become a menace and have to be looked after, as they increase with amazing rapidity. It is claimed that they will not stand the eastern climate when the weather becomes cold and that by that time they will have finished their labors of ridding the country of the gypsy moth. G.

HANNAH HOBART The Pride of California

The grand prize winner in competition with the latest and very best products in Carnations, east or west, for the last eight years.

Mr. John A. Balmer, of Olealum, Washington, after his visit to our nurseries in January, 1902, wrote an article for a trade paper in which he said: "The Hannah Hobart is really a remarkable flower, never less than four inches, and frequently four and one-half inches across. In color it is a shade deeper than Lawson, but the petal arrangement is quite different, in this respect it most resembles the old Jubilee, but of course the color is different. I saw two large houses of it at Sievers', and the sight is one long to be remembered, hundreds of blooms and not a poor one in the lot, and everyone the exact counterpart of the other, no burst calyxes, but every flower supported on a 24-inch stem and all standing up like soldiers. There is certainly no carnation of its color that can equal it."

The above is a truthful statement of facts by a very competent gentleman, and if needing verification, the simple assertion that the flowers of this magnificient variety of Carnation have been sold wholesale as high as $1.50 per dozen, and none less than $1 per dozen up to date, should be enough to convince anybody of its intrinsic value.

The constant inquiry by everyone who has seen the plants in flower is: "When will the Hannah Hobart be for sale?" This led us at last to the conclusion to distribute the same next year, and we are ready to book orders from now on for delivery beginning Jan., 1906. Send your orders in early because they will be filled strictly in rotation.

The accompanying illustration is an average bloom of Carnation Hannah Hobart.

Price, $3.00 per 12; $15.00 per 100; $120.00 per 1000.

marks on the changes that have taken place within the last ten years.

Ten years ago I landed in California to seek my fortune as a florist, but found much difficulty in that line, as each place to which I went seemed to have mostly Chinese help; in fact, one place had a Chinaman as chrysanthemum grower at $75 per month. Then there was no agitation, but since it affects the employers the cry goes up as to how to restrict Japanese immigration. Now, as far as I am able to see into the question, the whole trouble is and has been with the employers themselves in not employing the best help and by so doing growing better stock. Even to the present time San Francisco has the reputation of handling poorer stock than any other large city in the United States.

Although a large amount of glass has gone up in California within the last three years, good stock brings one-third better price now than it did ten years ago. C. L. A.

Vegetable Forcing.

PREPARATORY WORK.

The work at the present time will be mostly in the nature of preparation. Where rhubarb and asparagus are grown for winter forcing every attention should be given to the plants, to have them as strong as possible. Little pulling should be done from rhubarb plants that are intended for forcing at any time, but from this on it is very important that none of the stalks be pulled, as it will certainly weaken the plants. When the plants are growing vigorously in the spring, pulling will not do so much harm, but even then it is all the better to leave all the growth on the plants, as it increases the strength of the plants and makes them much more profitable for forcing.

Unless during excessively dry spells it is seldom necessary to water the plants, but of course they must not be allowed to suffer for lack of moisture. Frequent stirring of the soil with the hoe is of great benefit in conserving the moisture during dry weather and both the rhubarb and the asparagus patch should have a good deal of attention in this respect.

Rhubarb is not subject to the attacks of injurious insects or fungous diseases, but asparagus, on the other hand, is usually attacked by both. The beetle has pretty well run its course now but unless it has been kept in check will have caused considerable damage to the plants. For this pest we have found nothing better than a good dusting of air-slaked lime. The best time to apply it is in the morning, when the dew is on; it will then stick fast to the stems and foliage. This prevents the insects from feeding and from depositing their eggs and we have never seen the plants injured by it. Asparagus rust is another serious enemy to the asparagus plant and spraying should be done to arrest its spreading as soon as it makes its appearance in the bed. Any of the standard fungicides will check the rust but the great trouble is to get any of the mixtures to adhere to the foliage. Ammoniacal carbonate of copper is good but is rather expensive where a large quantity has to be used. A cheaper and also effective fungicide is Bordeaux mixture, where it can be made to adhere, but the spraying must be done very lightly and with a very fine spray or enough will not adhere to do much good. W. S. CROYDON.

BUTTE, MONT.

Business is and has been rushing. There has been a heavy call for funeral work and the Butte Floral Co. reports several large wedding decorations, which kept them on the jump through June. Outdoor flowers are not yet available on account of the cold weather we have had this spring. On June 23 it snowed all day and all outdoor stock is very backward.

J. H. King, of the Butte Floral Co., is making an eastern trip, visiting growers and supply houses to keep in touch with the new ideas. A. C. Wilhelm, of this concern, expects to attend the S. A. F. convention at Washington next month.

BARABOO, WIS.—Wm. Peck has just completed his third greenhouse. It is 11x47.

AURORA, ILL.—The Aurora Greenhouse Co. is building two new houses, one 26x120 and one 10x120.

CLARINDA, IA.—J. A. Marley says that the sales of spring stock were this season the best he has ever had.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

WM. J. QUICK will retire from the firm of Hewett & Quick, Burtonville, N. Y., and the nursery will be continued by Mrs. C. A. Hewett.

THE Buchanan Nursery Co., St. Charles, Man., is endeavoring to add to the interest in growing small fruits by offering a prize for the best collection at the Winnipeg Industrial Exposition.

EVERY season there is increased call for American elms in sizes above three inches caliper. The elm makes a rapid and long continued growth in fairly moist soil and the planting should not be too close.

There will be a large showing of fruits at the twenty-ninth biennial meeting of the American Pomological Society at Kansas City, August 8 to 10. Silver and bronze medals will be awarded to worthy exhibits.

MARIE LEMOINE.

There is confusion as to Peony Marie Lemoine, at least two varieties being offered under that name. One variety is an early blush white, not large and of ordinary growth. The other is the latest white, ivory white in color, the flower large and solid. It is of sturdy, upright growth and does not require supports at any stage. The foliage is dark, glossy green and the lowest leaves are within two inches of the ground, so that it may be cut with long stems without injury to the plant. It is stated by those who have visited the principal growers that some of the largest stocks correspond to the first description.

ALL IT IS WORTH.

The following is clipped from our British contemporary, the Horticultural Advertiser:

Mme. N. Levavasseur seems to be boomed for all it is worth (if not even a little more) in the States, all the principal growers advertising large stocks of it. It is claimed it may be had in bloom all the year around and continuously throughout the season, unlike the Crimson Rambler, which makes one great show and is then over for the year. Our busy cousins cannot find time for such a mouthful of a name as that given by the raiser, and have rechristened it as the Baby Rambler.

NAME OF INSECT.

Can you tell me what the enclosed insect is, how to get rid of it and all about it? H. & C.

The shrub sent we found to be very badly affected with woolly aphis, known in Europe as American blight. It is particularly bad on apple trees, but attacks a number of other trees. Spraying with poisonous substances is of no avail against these sucking insects. They require to be hit with a soap or oil mixture. Kerosene emulsion is probably the best insecticide to use against this pest. Make it as follows: One-half pound of any hard soap like Ivory or Welcome, one gallon hot water, two gallons kerosene. Pour the kerosene into the hot soap mixture and stir vigorously for a few minutes. Keep in a stone receptacle. In spraying use one ounce to each gallon of water. Melt thoroughly in hot water before adding to the cold water. This strength, if well directed, should clear out the aphis. If any linger, give a second application. Whale oil soap is another excellent remedy. Use two pounds to fifty gallons of water. Apply with a force pump or barrel sprayer with an agitator. Do not attempt to use the soapy solutions with poisons of any sort. They are not effective, as they do not mix readily.

MILWAUKEE.

Last week was a most satisfactory one to the trade. Commencement exercises, June weddings and several large funerals kept the receipts cleaned up, and prices equaled midwinter on choice stock. The C. C. Pollworth Co. is cutting some fine roses in nearly all varieties and the stock looks promising for a good supply during the summer months. Carnations are shortening up in supply, but quality is good considering the changeable weather we have been having. Peonies are holding out remarkably this season and some of the finest blooms came in during the last week of June. There was a good supply of valley and sweet peas during June, but the prices realized were not up to former seasons.

The wet weather is having a bad effect on carnation plants in the field in some localities where they are planted on low ground and reports of stem-rot are numerous.

The convention of Modern Woodmen last week did not benefit the trade in general, but some of the street men disposed of quite a quantity of the cheaper grade of stock. Quite a number of the craft are Woodmen and many visitors were attracted here by the low railroad rate. James Chacona's stock of flowers was badly damaged through a recent fire in the basement of his establishment. The smoke put all the carnations to sleep, even in the ice-box, although little damage was done to the store. INCOG.

NEOSHO, MO.—J. G. Angel says bedding plants sold well this spring and trade is fine now.

HOOPESTON, ILL.—A. Peterson has bought a new sixty horse-power boiler and will add it to his heating plant for greenhouses and residence.

HAMILTON, O.—In a recent runaway the horse of Wm. Lodder severely kicked a young woman who was already a cripple as the result of a railroad accident.

ROCKFORD, ILL.—H. W. Buckbee has let the contract for structural material for the big new range to the John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, and the work is well under way.

PIPING.

I have a greenhouse 16x30 feet, nine feet to the ridge. There is no glass in the sides and in only one gable, the other being against the dwelling. What would be the best plan to heat it with hot water to 55 degrees where it is sometimes 15 degrees below zero? What size of flow and how many and what size of returns will be most economical? U. D.

A method of piping which you can follow which will be economical to install and as satisfactory as any is as follows: Carry a 2-inch flow from the boiler under the ridge of the house to the most distant end. At that point divide the pipe to return by three manifolds, or coils, one under each of the side benches and one under the center bench. Place five 1¼-inch pipes in each of the three coils, making fifteen 1¼-inch pipes returning the length of the house. By the proper use of gate valves in these returns the number in commission can be arranged to suit the outside temperature. An elevated expansion tank will be essential to the success of this system. The bottom of the expansion tank should be four feet or more above the highest point in the flow pipe. The pipe connecting the expansion tank with the system should join the main return close to the boiler. An air vent will also be necessary upon the main flow pipe at the most distant point from the boiler, which should also be the highest point in the system.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The Tarrytown Horticultural Society held its regular monthly meeting on Tuesday evening, June 27. Three new members were elected and two names proposed for membership. The prize this month was given for the best collection of outdoor flowers, shrubs included. Several fine collections were staged, the winning lot coming from Greystone, Samuel Untermyer's place at Yonkers, his gardener, John Featherstone, staging over sixty varieties. The F. R. Pierson Co. exhibited a number of beautiful varieties of iris, also some of the newer climbing roses, all of which were very much admired. It was decided to hold the annual outing in August, Rye Beach being again selected as being the most accessible to the majority of the members. W. S.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

The Southwestern Excursion Bureau announces a round trip rate of one and one-third fare to the convention at Washington in co-operation with the other railroad passenger committees who have made similar announcements. The territory under the jurisdiction of this bureau includes southern Missouri, southeastern Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Texas.

Wm. J. Stewart, Sec'y.

CEMETERY PLANTING.

The rules and regulations of the modern cemetery, covering the permissible plants in the decoration of graves and lots, when first promulgated, created more or less consternation in the florists' establishments in close proximity to the cemeteries. The lawn plan, with level graves, promised to seriously restrict the use of bedding plants and the class of shrubs and planting material so lavishly and irresponsibly used under the old regime; and while the authorities of the lawn plan cemeteries practically control such details nowadays, plants and shrubs used in the new order of things for memorial or decorative purposes are of so much better quality and kind that the trade has really been benefited rather than otherwise, and a prosperous spring and summer business is the rule. It may always be taken for granted that improvement carries with it compensating opportunities, besides imparting its beneficial influences to all allied interests, and the lawn plan of cemetery design and maintenance has further demonstrated the truth of this formula.—Park and Cemetery.

RANUNCULUS ASIATICUS.

"The re-introduction of what is believed to be the original form of Ranunculus Asiaticus, is certainly an interesting event, and may serve the purpose," says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser, "as did the re-introduction of the single dahlia, of giving a new lease of popularity to a flower, which, in the first half of the nineteenth century, was highly popular. Gerarde, a herbalist of celebrity, in the year 1596, wrote concerning the ranunculus, and about the same time, Parkinson specifically enumerates several varieties of this flower. The exact period of introduction of the type to this country is probably unknown. It may be surmised that the original introduction was single-flowered, and that with cultivation a double form put in appearance. Van Oosten, who published a work in England, in 1703, says there are two sorts of ranunculus, single and double. By the early part of the nineteenth century, the single varieties appear to have dropped out of cultivation, but there had been a great increase of sorts, for John Mason, who established himself in business in 1781, and therewith laid the foundation of the house of Cooper, Taber & Co., published a catalogue in 1820, which contained nearly 400 sorts of ranunculus, showing how the varieties had multiplied. The Dutchmen early saw the advantage of cultivating the ranunculus, and from that source was derived most of the varieties with strong and dark body colors. The English growers, not content with the Dutch strains, turned their attention to the production of lighter and parti-colored varieties, these productions having brilliant edges and spots on white and yellow grounds. As late as 1858, Carey Tyso published a pamphlet dealing with the culture of the ranunculus, in which he offered collections of 100 varieties. Where are they now? It is to be feared utterly lost. Even the coarser and hardier turban varieties, which were at one time grown so much in market gardens round London, the scarlet turban especially, for bunching, have practically disappeared."

Lake Odessa, Mich.—The Lake Odessa Vegetable & Floral Co. is building two greenhouses, 20x100, and the necessary service buildings. The members of the firm are C. L. Vincent, formerly of Vincent Bros., Ionia, Mich., and G. P. Gassett, of Grand Rapids.

Auburn, N. Y.—John A. Kraus has filed a petition in bankruptcy, scheduling liabilities of $1,810.77 and assets of $570, part of which is claimed as exempt. The liabilities in the trade are not large. Those scheduled are: P. R. Quinlan & Co., Syracuse, $75; U. S. Cut Flower Co., Elmira, $6.24; Syracuse Pottery Co., Syracuse, $22.38; W. & T. Cass, Geneva, $25.75; Smith & Gannett, Geneva, $3.

SIZE OF BOILER.

I am about to erect two connected houses, even-span, 20x100, posts six feet, twelve feet to ridge and with two feet of side ventilation. A work-room protects the north end. What size horizontal tubular boiler will be required for steam to maintain a temperature at 55 degrees with the outside temperature sometimes down to 18 and 20 degrees below zero? Will also run a pipe into the dwelling and heat two rooms, each 14x14, one eight feet high, the other nine feet.

T. G. Y.

A twelve to fifteen horse-power return tubular horizontal boiler should be ample for your work. A boiler with 200 to 240 square feet of heating surface would be ample. A fifteen horse-power horizontal return tubular boiler usually carries 230 to 240 square feet of heating surface and should therefore meet the requirements. Your greenhouses will require about 1,150 square feet of radiating surface and the dwelling rooms about seventy-five feet each, or a total of about 1,300 square feet. L. C. C.

HEAT FOR VIRGINIA.

I have four houses running north and south. First a house 19x50 for roses, then one 19x50 for carnations, next one 10x50 for pot plants, then one 10x50 for bedding stock and propagating. The boiler shed is at the east end. The wide houses have three benches, the others two each. The range is all connected and the houses are six feet high to the gutters. A 2-inch flow runs along the south ends, there are two 1½-inch pipes under each bench, returning in a 2-inch pipe along the north ends of the houses. Steam is used and in Virginia we seldom have it as cold as zero. Have I radiation enough?

H. L. L.

The six 1½-inch pipes, i. e., two under each bench, will be sufficient for carnations but hardly enough for roses. The rose house should be provided with at least two additional pipes, that is, eight 1½-inch pipes, or their equivalent, to provide for trying periods, even in Virginia. L. C. C.

TWEMLOW'S

Old English Glazing Putty

Liquid and Elastic

For Bedding Glass in Sash or for Filling Cracks or Seams In Roof Joints or Frames of Greenhouses or Hotbeds.

It is used in Machine or Bulb. If too thick for bulb thin with a little Pure Linseed Oil, boiled. So thinned, it can be brushed into any crack or leak, making a solid filling. It makes a solid bed, impervious to moisture, and holds glass in its place, and will stop any crevice or fault. When once set on dry wood it does not heave. As regards the goods, the article is no new invention, but simply an article of the very best class, to do thoroughly good work, like old-time gentlemen expected when sashes were made with lead, and small panes of glass used that caught the water and leaked unless set with an elastic putty, which once set by a mechanic was expected to remain, and did remain in good shape. This Twemlow's Old English Glazing Putty does; nothing more, nothing less. SOLD BY THE FLORISTS' SUPPLY HOUSES.

CUT-WORMS.

Enclosed herewith find a sample of a worm that is infesting our carnation benches, eating the heart right out of the blossoms. Will you please tell us what is to be done to get rid of them.

L. E. C.

The worm you complain of is a variety of cut-worm which is quite common in the carnation houses. They are seldom present in large numbers, so to pick them by hand is the best way to get rid of them. Their feeding time is at night, or early in the morning, before daybreak. Take a good, strong light and go through the houses and you will have little trouble in catching them. They move slowly, comparatively. If they are present in great numbers you can fight them better with poison. A tablespoonful of Paris green to three gallons of water sprayed on in the evening will be found effective. You will find, however, that water does not readily adhere to the smooth surface on carnation growth, so you may have to repeat the application several times before you succeed in getting a fair quantity to stick. During the day these worms bury themselves in the soil and it is difficult to find them.

A. F. J. BAUR.

THRIPS AND GREEN-FLY.

We are sending some carnation foliage and would like to know what is the cause of the trouble you will see and how to combat the disease. F. B. C.

The trouble you complain of is not a disease primarily. The yellow, dead spots in the leaves are dead plant tissue caused by the punctures of greenfly and thrips. If you will pull apart some of the tops you will find away in the heart of them both of these insects. Nicotine in any form will drive them out and you must go for them vigorously, so your field plants will be clean and started into a new, clean growth before housing time.

If they are growing inside I would advise you to spray them with nicotine extract, as I think that is the most effective. Strong, fresh tobacco dust is all right for the field. Dust it on in the evening and the dew will moisten it and it will stick to the foliage longer. Spraying can be practiced in the field, too, with success. A. F. J. BAUR.

PLANTS IN THE FIELD.

There are various reports as to the condition of carnation plants in the field. Housing is beginning in many sections and will be in rapid progress within the next week or two, although many growers find that their plants are not in as good shape as might be for early benching. The eastern growers have not had as much rain as they would like at many points, but they have, as a rule, fared better than the western growers, who have in most instances had more rain than was good for the stock. At many places in Michigan, and also in Iowa and Kansas, floods have worked havoc in the carnation fields and growers who had counted on a surplus of good stock to market will, in some instances, find themselves compelled to buy to fill their benches.

There are probably more plants grown for the trade in the vicinity of Chicago than at any other point in the country. Chicago has had more rain than normal, a shortage at the first of June having been turned to a half-inch excess by July 10. Those growers who have their stock on high land as a rule have very good plants. Those who are on low land have lost some stock, but not nearly so large a proportion as is reported from the Michigan district. It looks as though there would be good business in the line of field grown carnation plants this fall.

A BIG MIXTURE.

I would like to know if I could grow the following mixture of plants in one house, also what temperature should I run it from fall until spring? Carnations, red, white and pink Lawson and Enchantress, Easter lilies, calla lilies, sweet peas, geraniums and spiræa. My house is new, has never been used. I expect to put in fourteen runs of 1½-inch pipe on the side walls and two 1½-inch pipes under the middle bench. Do you approve the arrangement?

E. A. M.

You have named two carnations it would be most undesirable to grow in the same house, as Lawson does best at 55 degrees at night, while Enchantress thrives at 46 to 48 degrees. Keep your house about 50 degrees at night and you will get along fairly well with all the other plants you mention. The trouble is while the Lilium longiflorum will grow nicely in a night temperature of 50 degrees, to bring them in by the all-important Easter time they may want 10 or 15 degrees higher for several weeks. You must not expect great success, with all your plants at one temperature, but it will be better to let them come along the best they will at a steady night temperature of 50 degrees than be jumping up the heat to suit any one crop of plants.

I do not like your 1½-inch pipes. You should not use less than 2-inch and distribute them as much as possible. The farther apart the heating pipes the better the radiation.

SUPPORTS.

As the plants grow the question of supports becomes one of importance and should be taken up as soon as possible. There are several ways of supporting the plants, but in my experience the best one is to use wire stakes and steady these by wires running parallel with each row of plants and sufficiently high to catch the stake some two feet from the ground. When the wires are drawn tight, as they should be, and the stakes are tied to the wire, the whole forms a rigid support for the plants and permits heavy syringing of the latter without breaking things to pieces. If one does not have enough wire stakes, bamboo canes are good and cheap and fill the bill almost as well.

Not a few growers run a wire for each row close to the ground and another one high up in the roof and then use a cheap, heavy twine between the wires for a support. This I do not like because it is impossible to get the strings tight enough and the stems cannot be kept so straight as when they are tied to a rigid stake.

Another way is to run several wires for each row at intervals of a foot or so in height, one above the other, and tie the plants to each wire as they grow upwards. This may have some merit as a time saver, but I would rather have the wire stake. Then each individual plant can be tied just where it happens to need it.

Get your plants tied up as soon as you can and do not let them lay around to get crooked in the stem and otherwise neglected.

Sun Scald.

Sun scald is likely to occur after a spell of dull, cloudy weather, during which the plants make a very soft, sappy growth. Then, when the hot sun strikes the house, the leaves wilt right down and the tips of the plants get injured. The proper thing to do is to keep the plants from wilting, if possible, by using more water, spraying the house more frequently and thus keeping the atmosphere charged with moisture. If the plants are wilting too much a thin coat of whiting can be sprayed over the glass with a syringe and this will prevent any injury by the sun and will be washed off again by the first shower.

It often happens that leaves will be burned in a line right across a house and this it will be found is caused by a bad spot in the glass, which should be painted out with white lead on the inside of the house. Then trouble will not be experienced again from it.

Varieties having thick, fleshy foliage are occasionally burned on the old leaves by the sun, but as it only catches odd leaves it does not do much damage and is generally put down as disease.

Pot Plants.

Single stem plants that are intended for 6-inch pots should be potted into their flowering pots as soon as they are ready. Do not under any circumstances allow them to become pot-bound or dried out in the small pots, as a perfect plant should have all its foliage right down to the pot, and this is impossible if the base of the plant gets hard and woody.

THE BOSTON FERN.

In spite of the several meritorious new ferns, each offered as a successor of the Boston, that sterling old variety keeps right on in the forefront of public favor. Each autumn there has been a cry that the Boston has been overdone and stock has been sold at cheap prices in fear of a slow market, but it has never yet failed that the end of the winter season, or the early summer, has found good Bostons scarce, the condition which prevails today. Last fall larger stocks were ready than ever before, but everything has been disposed of and there is now an unsatisfied demand for good stock in almost every size.

There are large quantities of Bostons planted out on benches and outdoors, which will be ready for potting this fall, and probably once again the growers who have not glass area to house all their Bostons will be making sacrifice sales, but they are not otherwise necessary. It may be taken as assured that Bostons will again be good property next spring.

VIOLET GROWING.

By B. T. Galloway.

Insects and Diseases.

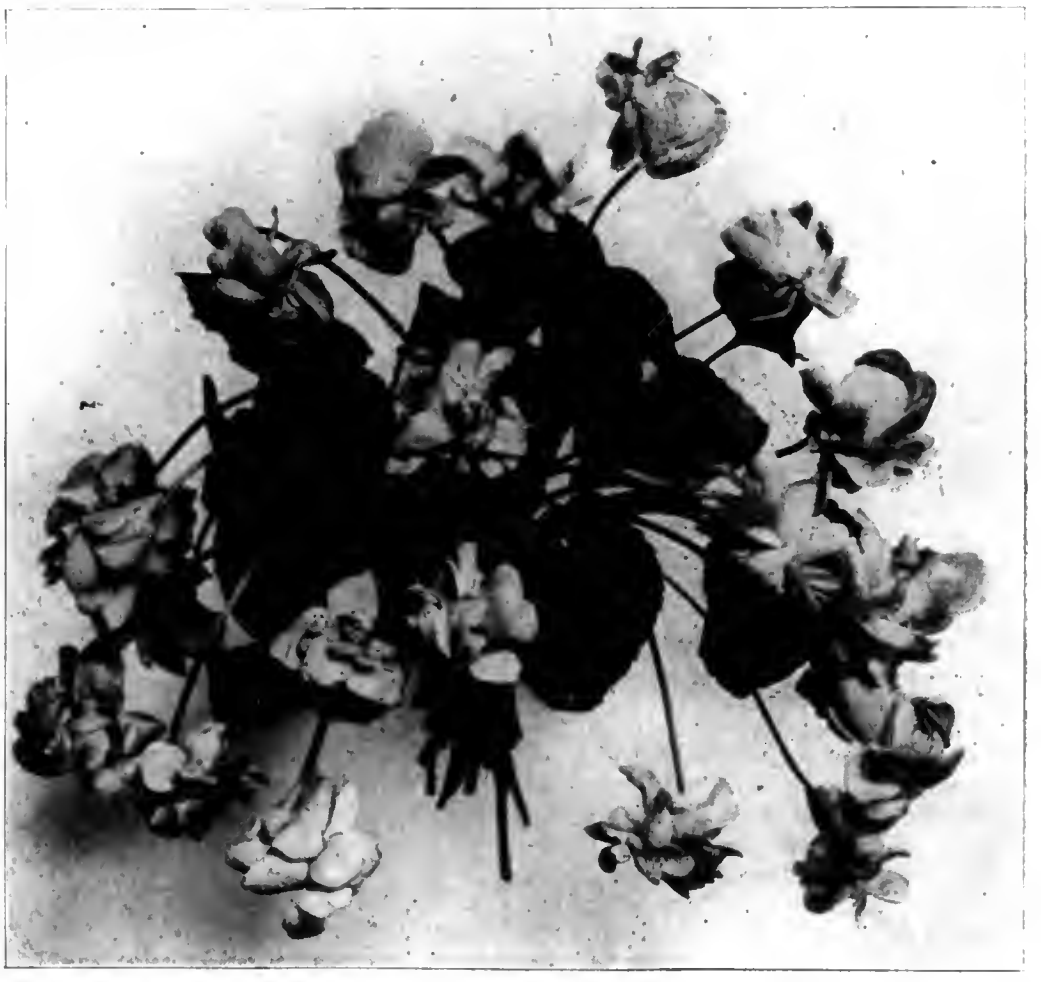
Practically the only insects that cause serious damage to the violet grower are the red spider and the black and green aphis. Violets are also seriously damaged at times by a nematode worm which attacks the growing buds, causing blind crowns. Of diseases the most destructive are the spot, and the wilt or stem-rot.

Red Spider.

Red spider is easily kept in check by thorough syringing throughout the season. As the growth of the plants increases, however, the syringing will have to be done with great care; otherwise, the leaves are left wet at night and diseases, especially spot, will result. A thorough syringing two or three times a week will keep red spider in check. It sometimes happens that red spider may become quite abundant and injurious on cuttings either on the cutting bench or in the flats. Where they can be readily syringed one of the most effective means of ridding the plants of the pest is to use a solution of Ivory soap sprayed on. Our practice is to use one ordinary five-cent bar of the soap to four or five gallons of water. The soap is shaved up with a small plane, dissolved with about a gallon of hot water, and then diluted to the quantity mentioned. After the soap solution is allowed to stand on the plants for an hour or two it should be syringed off. This solution destroys both the old and the young spiders, as well as a considerable per cent of the eggs. There is absolutely no danger in the use of the solution; in fact, we have frequently dipped the plants directly into it. This can be very easily done when handling the cuttings out of the bench. Bunches of cuttings can be dipped in the solution and then rinsed off in clear water.

Aphides.

For green and black aphis nothing is more effective than fumigation with cyanide gas. Fumigation with tobacco is more or less risky, as it is apt to bring on spot or other diseases. The gas treatment is so effective that it is now very generally used by violet growers. Care must be exercised in the handling of this gas, as it is exceedingly poisonous. The cubic contents of the greenhouse must be carefully worked out and the quantity of gas required accurately determined on this basis. Cyanide gas is made by combining potassium cyanide, ninety-eight per cent pure, with commercial sulphuric acid. The usual practice is to use fifteen one-hundredths of a gram of the pure cyanide for each cubic foot of house. Quite full and explicit instructions for the making and use of this gas have been published in the Review, by a number of the Experiment Stations and by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and may be received upon application.



Bud Nematode.

During the past seven or eight years the bud nematode has become very destructive in violet houses, especially in the eastern portion of the United States. It must be carefully watched, otherwise it will greatly cut down the profits and in some cases may render worthless practically all the plants. The worm is a microscopic animal living in the tender tissue of the buds. By the destruction of the bud tissue the terminal development of the offshoot is prevented and a blind crown results. In the securing of stock every precaution must be exercised in the matter of avoiding the introduction of this pest. When once introduced there is nothing to do but to eliminate it by the destruction of the infested plants. By carefully watching the stock and propagating only from absolutely healthy specimens the nematode worm can in large measure be kept in check.

The Spot Disease.

One of the most serious troubles affecting the violet is the so-called spot disease. Spot disease is likely to cause injury in the late summer or early fall. There is little danger to be feared from the trouble while the plants are young. After the plants become large and are growing vigorously the latter part of August and the first of September, spot is very likely to come on, especially if the leaves are allowed to remain moist over night. Spot disease more than anything else has brought about the growing of violets under glass during the entire season. By exercising care in the matter of watering and not allowing the water to collect on the foliage in the evening, and by keeping the plants in good vigorous growth but not allowing them to become too soft, spot may be largely prevented.

As already indicated, excessive fumigation with tobacco will under certain conditions almost invariably result in a bad case of spot. Spot is caused by a fungus, the spores or reproductive bodies of which are nearly always present in the greenhouse. It is only necessary that the plants be weakened in some way when the spores will infect the leaves and spot results. In case of an attack of spot the only thing that can be done is to remove the badly spotted leaves and burn them. If only a spot or two occurs on a leaf, the affected portions may be cut out. Never under any circumstances should these leaves be thrown in the walks or back of the beds, as they are always a source of further infection. Cleanliness in this case, as in all others with the violet, is absolutely essential to success.

Wilt or Stem-Rot.

Wilt, or stem-rot, is very apt to come on the latter part of August after the plants have attained considerable size. During the warm days plants here and there are seen to wilt slightly, recovering after the sun goes down. This will continue for a week or longer, when suddenly the plant wilts down and fails to recover. The difficulty is due to the presence of a fungus in the tissues of the stem. Experience has shown that infection in most cases occurs when the cutting is in the bench being rooted. Little black specks may be seen on the stems of the rooted plants. Frequently these affected areas are not larger than the point of a pin and they may remain practically dormant for months. In the mean time the plant has been growing and the fungus suddenly begins to develop, resulting in the complete girdling of the stem and the cutting off of the supply of moisture and nourishment. Certain kinds of sand are very apt to be infected with the spores of this fungus. This is especially true of sand where there is likelihood of organic matter being present in it. For cuttings the best material is clean bank sand. If upon examination many of the cuttings are found to be infested with the fungus, they should be discarded and only the healthy ones planted.

INCARVILLEAS.

The incarvilleas are among the most showy of our hardy perennial plants. Belonging to the Bignoniaceæ family, they are fully as attractive as members of that family cultivated under glass. I. Delvayi has of late years achieved an extraordinary popularity and a vase of it in a collection of hardy herbaceous flowers arrests instant attention. I. variabilis, another variety grown to some extent, was introduced in 1898, by Haage & Schmidt, of Erfurt, Germany. The variety I. Olgæ is a native of Turkestan, growing two to three feet in height, with pale pink flowers, the tubes being one and a half to two inches long. I. Olgæ is more reliably hardy than I. Delvayi and I. variabilis. The two latter varieties we are usually unable to winter outdoors in Massachusetts, although one or two growers have succeeded in doing so. A warm, sunny spot, with sandy soil well manured, suits these plants. If kept outside a thick covering of leaves must be given. The safer plan is to lift the roots and store in a frame, or pack the same in dry sand in a cool cellar in the same way as dahlias are often preserved.

The accompanying illustration is from a plant of Incarvillea Olgæ grown under glass at Garfield park, Chicago.

CLIMBING FERN.

I enclose a piece of a vine of which I should like to know the name and where stock can be procured. The florist of whom I procured this sample says he thinks it is Lygodium scandens. He has only a few plants and knows of none except a few he has sold from time to time. It grows like smilax and is much better for design work and decorating.

T. W. L.

The specimen in question is a portion of a frond of one of the climbing ferns and is probably Lygodium Japonicum instead of L. scandens. This fern is a native of Japan and the East Indies, and is not largely grown in the trade, although it has been in cultivation for many years. Lygodium could undoubtedly be used to advantage in design work and decorating, but it will not produce the same quantity of growth as smilax, and cannot be grown so profitably.

THE THURLOWS.

One of the oldest and best known of Massachusetts nurserymen is T. C. Thurlow, of West Newbury. Mr. Thurlow's ancestors came from England in the early days of the settlement, locating at Newbury in 1635. His grandfather, born in 1777, was a farmer and turned his attention to fruit growing and market gardening. His son, born in 1805, also went strongly in for fruit growing. He also frequently visited the nurseries of Wilder, Breck, Hovey, Kenricks and other famous Boston men of that time. Thomas Chase Thurlow, born in 1832, inherited his ancestors' love for fruits, but being of rather delicate physique, after working with his father in the nurseries for some time taught a district school for two or three years. In 1857 he went west for a year, riding horseback in Missouri half the time, and returned east with health fully restored.

He decided to start a nursery and five acres at $50 per acre was the modest beginning his purse would permit, but he made and saved more on that area than he has since done on forty. Sugar maples and other shade trees, evergreens and deciduous shrubs were taken in hand. Living in a very cold country, he quickly saw the necessity of wind breaks and screens. Norway and white spruce were mostly used. The first hedge was planted forty years ago, is eight feet high and eight feet in diameter at the base. It is pruned each year in August or September. Other hedges planted have been allowed to grow higher, from fifteen to twenty feet high. One on the northwest side of a ten-acre field is forty feet high. Grass paths some eight feet wide are left on each side of the hedge. These are found convenient to team over. Crops are found to grow just as well near the hedges as away from them.

The great advantage of these hedges, which are very dense, is the protection from cold winds to buildings and nurseries. Thousands of hybrid rhododendrons, azaleas and other plants of doubtful hardiness are carried through without other protection of any sort. Norway spruce is liked better than the white spruce as a hedge. The Douglas fir also promises well and Siberian arbor-vitæ makes a neat hedge. Pines are not a success and hemlocks are unreliable.

These hedges shelter hundreds of robins and other native birds, which are fed in very severe weather. The result is that the winter birds are found to eat the eggs of various pests, and the summer birds the insects and moths. Spraying has been found unnecessary. Certainly all stock looks remarkably clean in nurseries and orchards.

Peonies for many years have been a great specialty with Mr. Thurlow. A few years ago he sold his entire collection to the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., but has again gone into their culture extensively and now has some 600 varieties, which include many of the very finest French, English and American sorts. He anticipates making a big display in 1906 when the Peony Society meets in Boston. Herbaceous phlox and German iris are other specialties largely handled. Rhododendrons, azaleas, kalmias, choice specimen coniferæ, shade trees and native shrubs are other lines gone into heavily. Plants are all well grown and a credit to any nursery.

Mr. Thurlow, although 72 years of age, is as enthusiastic a grower as ever and loves to talk on fruits, hedges and shrubs, to say nothing of his favorite peonies. He has two sons in the business and a grandson makes the tenth generation born at Newbury. There is evidently little fear of the name of Thurlow becoming a reminiscence, as the young men are worthy chips of the old block and extremely progressive and up-to-date in all their ideas.

EARLY INSECTICIDES.

[A paper by C. N. Ruedlinger, read before the Florists' Club of Hartford, Conn., at its June meeting.]

In order to show that the raising of good fruits and flowers by our ancestors was carried on under difficulties and successfully accomplished largely through the persistent use of insecticides, I herewith give a short list of remedies used in olden times, some of which are in use today as standard insecticides:

In 1629 John Parkinson recommended for the canker to cut it out and then apply vinegar and cow manure.

In 1711 a spray of water with ruta was used in France for cantharides (fly).

In 1763 a preparation was put up in Marseilles as a remedy for plant lice, consisting of bad tobacco and water-slaked lime. Directions for use: "First wet the trees infested with lice, then rub flowers of sulphur upon the insects and it will cause them all to burst."

In 1791 Forsyth's Composition was used: One bushel fresh cow dung, one-half bushel lime rubbish, one-half bushel wood ashes and one-sixteenth bushel sand and soap suds, to make it bind. After applying, sift dry powder of wood ashes and one-sixth part ashes of burnt bones. This composition was recommended to cure disease, defects and injuries to plants, was held particularly valuable in promoting the healing of wounds and was commonly used to fill cavities in trees.

In 1797 an article appeared in the New England Farmer or Georgical Dictionary, where Sam Dean, D. D., vice president of Bowdoin College, says: "There are several experiments I could wish to have tried for subduing these insects, such as burning brimstone under the trees in a calm time; or piling dry ashes or dry loose sand, 'round the roots of trees in the spring; or throwing powdered quicklime or soot over the trees when they are wet; or sprinkling them about the beginning of June with sea water or water in which wormwood or walnut leaves have been boiled. The liquid may be safely applied to all parts of a tree by a large wooden syringe or squirt. I should suppose that the best time for making trial of these methods would be soon after the worms are hatched, for at that stage of their existence they are tender and the more easily killed. Sometimes a frost, happening at this season, has destroyed them. This I am told was the case in some places in the year 1799.''

In a Treatise on the Culture and Management of Fruit Trees (American edition, edited by William Cobbett, 1802) Forsyth recommended the following mixture for the destruction of aphis: One-half peck unslaked lime, thirty-two gallons water. Allow this to stand three or four days, stirring two or three times a day. He recommended the same mixture for the destruction of red spider, but said that pure water would also answer the purpose. It is also stated that several English nurserymen used train oil (whale oil) against coccus or scale insects on plants.

J. Thacher, M. D., in the American Orchardist, 1822, gives a list of the following articles to be used against the apple tree borer, an insect that is designated as a ''pernicious reptile'' by the author: After digging out the borer fill the cavity about the base of the tree with ''flax rubbish, sea-weed, ashes, lime, sea-shells, sea-sand, mortar rubbish, clay, tanner's bark, leather scrapings, etc.''

In a Massachusetts agricultural report is stated that Josiak Knapp, of Boston, in 1814, used air-slaked lime with success against the canker worm. Later experience has shown it to be of little benefit for the canker worm, but recommends it for the slug on the leaves of fruit trees. Mr. Yates, of Albany, recommended the following solution for caterpillars: One handful wormwood, one handful rue, two handsful of Virginia tobacco and two pailsful of water.

In 1822 E. Perley recommended for scale insects on trees to wash them with lye or brine. On account of cheapness and ease of preparation clay paint was used very extensively. The Caledonian Horticultural Society, of Scotland, recommended that paint in 1825.

The following solution commonly used for bed-bugs, was also recommended for canker by the Practical American Gardener, Baltimore, in 1822: Corrosive sublimate, spirits and soft water.

On November 20, 1821, John Robertson read a paper before the London Horticultural Society, saying: ''Sulphur is the only specific remedy for mildew on peaches.'' William Cobbett, in the English Gardener, 1829, recommended for the cotton blight (woolly aphis) a wash of something strong, such as tobacco juice, or water in which potatoes have been boiled, or rubbing the part with mercurial ointment.

In The New American Gardener, 1832, Thomas Fessenden gives a list of solutions supposed to be strong enough to overcome the organisms against which they were applied, as follows: Simple water, soap-suds, tobacco water, decoctions of elder, walnut leaves, bitter herbs, pepper, lye of wood-ashes, solutions of pot and pearl ashes, water impregnated with salt, tar, turpentine, etc.; or they may be dusted with sulphur, quicklime or other acrid substances.

Lindley's Guide to the Orchard and Kitchen Garden, 1831, recommends vinegar for destroying insects.

In the New American Gardener, 1832, Fessenden quotes Loudon as saying: ''Saline substances mixed with water are injurious to most insects with tender skins and hot water is equally if not more powerfully injurious. Water heated to 120 or 130 degrees will not injure plants whose leaves are expanded and in some degree hardened; water at 200 degrees or upward may be poured over leafless plants.''

Thomas C. Thurlow.

Loudon's Encyclopedia of Gardening, 1878, quotes Mr. Swainson as saying that hot water will destroy more aphis than by the use of tobacco water.

In the New American Orchard, 1833, Dr. W. Kenrick speaks of alve and cayenne pepper for the aphis and quicklime, flowers of sulphur and lampblack for a white mealy insect and mildew on grapes.

In 1835 John Mearns recommended: ''Strongest farm-yard drainage, soft soap and flowers of brimstone'' for the destruction of insects.

White hellebore was used as early as 1842, particularly in destroying worms on gooseberry plants. In America it was not until 1858, the time when the currant worm was first noticed, that J. Harris recommended hellebore.

J. Murray, in 1841, used sulphur and alcohol against mildew on peach trees. In December, 1844, nitre and water was used for mildew on chrysanthemums. On March 5, 1842, David Haggerston was awarded a premium of $120 by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society for the cheapest and most effective mode of destroying the rose bug. It was two pounds whale oil soap to fifteen gallons water. A recipe made up by Nichols consisted of soft soap, flowers of sulphur, nux vomica and soft water, supposed to be good for any scale insects.

Loudon publishes Hamilton's recipe, consisting of the following ingredients: Sulphur, Scotch snuff, hellebore powder, nux vomica, soft soap, cayenne pepper, tobacco liquor and boiling water. Hamilton himself mentions that solution as a specific, if properly used; that is, while you wash the plants with this solution, remove the insects.

Grison, head vegetable gardener at Versailles, recommended flowers of sulphur, fresh slaked lime and water, for mildew. The liquid was called the ''Grison Liquid'' and is still in use. In 1850 J. Young, of Louisville, Ky., found that covering the young fruit with a thin coating of lime was a preventive for the plum curculio.

In 1861 W. F. Radclyffe experimented with copper sulphate, as it was used with good success for smutty seed-wheat. He tried it on roses for mildew. Not long after that growers were warned not to use sulphate of copper, as it would kill roses by coming in contact with their roots, and no more was heard of it until 1883, when, under the directions of Millardet, experiments were made with sulphate, carbonate, phosphate and sulphide of copper.

I may say a few words in regard to the invention of Bordeaux mixture. In southwestern France, in the Maritime department of Gironde, is situated the city of Bordeaux. It is one of the greatest grape raising districts. It was here that the downy mildew of America made its first appearance, about 1878. The year 1882 was particularly favorable for the disease and but few vines escaped the attack. Those that escaped were situated along the highways. Vineyardists in these localities had suffered considerable losses from the stealing of their grapes by children and travelers along the highways. It had been the custom to sprinkle verdigris upon a few rows near the highway to give the appearance of having been poisoned. Some years before the appearance of the downy mildew, this substance being too expensive, it was replaced by a mixture of the milk of lime and some salt of copper. The vines thus treated were the ones which had retained their foliage through the fall of 1882, while others growing further from the road lost their leaves. Prillieux and Millardet were among the first ones to note the effect and they started at once to work out a proper solution, in which work they were assisted by U. Gayon, professor of chemistry in Bordeaux. It is consequently to these men that the honor of having first experimented with the "Bouillie Bordelaise," as it then began to be called, may be granted; and to Millardet in particular may be given the credit of being the first to plan and publish results which showed plainly the value of the copper compounds in commercial work.

Vegetable Forcing.

GREENHOUSE cauliflowers in New York are fetching 75 cents to $1 per dozen; other greenhouse vegetables are practically out of the market.

LETTUCE FOR FRAMES.

Seeds of lettuce should be sown now to give stock for planting in frames later on for fall use. The best place to sow the seeds is in cold frames, as they cannot be depended on to come up in the open ground should dry weather prevail. In frames they are perfectly under control, watering is easier attended to and shading can easily be given when necessary. The chief advantage of shade is to prevent the drying out of the soil too frequently just after the seed is sown and up to the time the little plants are well over the ground. In the open ground during bright, dry weather the moisture evaporates so quickly that it does little or no good as far as the seeds are concerned, but only hardens the surface and makes it hard for the seeds that do germinate to break through the crust. When shade can be given this crustation is prevented, both on account of less frequent application of water being necessary and by the eliminating of the baking influence of the sun.

As soon as the plants are large enough to handle they should be pricked out. About two inches apart each way will be sufficient room to make nice, stocky plants. A frame is the best place for the plants to be pricked into, though flats may be used if desired. Shade, of course, will be necessary for a few days after moving until the plants have made enough fresh roots in their new quarters to support themselves under the full influence of sunlight.

When planting where the plants are to mature the best distance apart is eight inches each way, but this will depend a good deal upon the size of the frames used. If the plants come so that there is barely room enough for the rows at this distance they could be kept just a little closer, but if kept further apart it would be all the better for the development of the plants. If the soil in the frame is a good, friable loam in fairly good condition, the addition of a good dressing of well decomposed manure will be all that will be needed to produce a good crop, but if the soil is of poor quality it may pay to remove it to a depth of about six inches and substitute with the same depth of a good fresh soil. W. S. CROYDON.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market is dull now. It has, in fact, reached the summer level. The principal demand is for funeral flowers. Offerings for these occasions appear to be more general than in the past. Additions to the list consist in a few nice cattleyas at S. S. Pennock's, some fine Lilium auratum at the Leo Niessen Co.'s and plenty of sweet peas of improved quality from late sown seed.

At the Flower Market.

It was a quiet afternoon in July. Business was about over for the day, when half a dozen of the best known men in our profession gathered at the Flower Market. While they were waiting to dispose of the matter that had brought them together, the Commodore enlivened the time.

"I do not believe," he said, "in doing a cheap, nasty business. Anyone who wants to do that kind of thing can do it and welcome. He will get no benefit from it. It is far better to grow plants or flowers of good quality and sell a moderate number at a remunerative price, and throw the rest away, if necessary, than to sell them all at less than cost. I remember well," he continued, "how in the old days we used to get $10 for a bouquet of mixed flowers. That was the regular price. One day a man asked me to make him a bouquet entirely of rose buds. I told him it would cost $20. The man asked why it was so expensive. Could not the carnations and violets be used in some other way? I told him yes, but that the roses were desirable flowers and worth more alone. He agreed to pay the price. My partner thought I had made a mistake, but that man bought four more bouquets of rose buds at the same price that week. He liked the lady who received them to have something choice.

"I once made up a bouquet of Jacqs," the Commodore continued, "worth $54, thirty-six flowers at $1.50 each."

"Hold on, Commodore," one of the group exclaimed; "this will all be published." But the Commodore knew that it wasn't everybody who could tell things worth publishing and kept right on:

"Yes, that man was pleased, too. He came in afterwards and asked for another bouquet like it, only handsomer. So he got three dozen more Jacqs, with a broad band of lily of the valley around it, price $60. I believe in educating the public up to knowing a good article and then making them pay for it."

THE ROCKING GRATE.

Visitors are always numerous at the big cut flower establishments north of Chicago and many of those who have gone through the Peter Reinberg, J. A. Budlong, Wietor Bros., Emil Buettner and other well known ranges the past season have noted, among other interesting features, a new grate either being installed or in operation under the boilers. It is called a "rocking" grate, a device for shaking out the ashes without opening the fire doors, and is made by a Chicago concern, the Martin Grate Co., 283 Dearborn street. These growers were led to adopt this grate because it is in successful operation in many of the largest steam making plants in Chicago and the middle west, where elaborate systems of cost keeping are employed, and in every case has demonstrated its ability to reduce fuel bills and increase the efficiency of the boiler. If there is any place where the coal bill is an important factor, it is in a greenhouse. The rocking grate is of reasonable first cost, but any way it would be entitled to a trial on the showing of economy in operation.

Grate Bar of the Rocking Grate.

While the grate seems to be satisfactory with any kind of fuel, it is especially so where there is a large percentage of fine coal, as in Pocahontas, which is the favorite fuel of most of the large growers in the vicinity of Chicago. It also saves coal where the cheaper grades are burned, such as slack or screenings. The construction is such that none of the fine coal drops through into the ash pit, as so much of it does with even the most careful firing on the ordinary grate. Those growers who have tried it at once noticed the difference in the ash. Another saving is in the large amount of heat lost in frequently opening the fire doors to stir up the fire with the slice bar. This not only breaks up the cake and sends fine coal into the pit, but has a very appreciable effect in cooling off the boiler. The rocking grate operates by a lever on the outside and frees the grate of ashes without opening the doors. The movement is not sufficient to break the cake and send the live coals into the ash pit, but keeps an unrestricted flow of air passing through the fire and produces complete combustion.

One of the accompanying illustrations shows the setting commonly used for a horizontal return tubular boiler with this grate in place. The other illustration shows one of the bars in detail.

It will be noted that the bars extend lengthwise of the fire box, an arrangement which, in connection with the design of the bar itself, is intended to facilitate the occasional use of the slice bar and hoe, and does away with the objection urged where the surface is irregular. The bar is one and one-half inches in width, including teeth, and five and one-half inches in depth. The spaces between the bars are not enlarged in the act of shaking, nor is it possible for clinker or other substances to drop down between and clog the grate, and as there are no long fingers it is not possible for a fireman to leave any part of the grate projecting up into the fire to be burned off.

This grate bar is very heavy, though the heavy part is a considerable distance below the fire line, with a free circulation of air through the bars horizontally. This circulation of air prevents the heavy part of the bar from overheating and warping. The top of the bar is slotted near each end to allow for expansion and contraction, and this slot and the free circulation of air are said to result in long life for the bar.

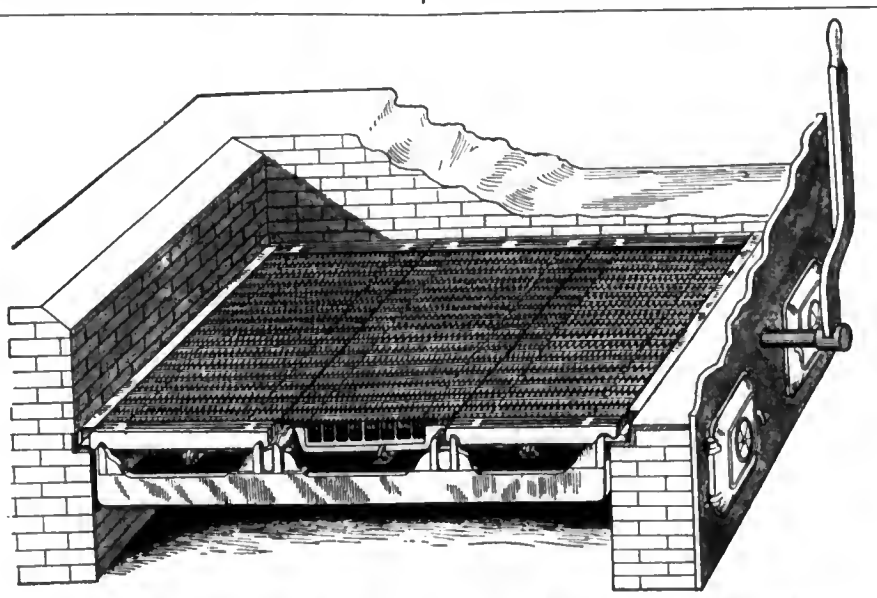
The bars rest with a wedge-shaped bearing on the supporting bars, making the operation of the grate extremely easy. It is said that very little effort is required to shake a grate sixty square feet in area. Ordinarily the air space for draft is about fifty per cent of the grate area, but it can be increased in a few minutes by changing the position of the bars.

The grate is adapted to use under any boiler. The Chicago growers who are using it put it under their old return tubular boilers and it can be installed under almost any kind of a heater with little trouble. No change in the fire box is required and the only cutting necessary is a 2-inch hole through the boiler front for the shaker rod.

DALLAS, TEX.

The local papers report that E. H. R. Green, son of Mrs. Hetty Green, is to become a florist. The announcement was made today of an important purchase of Dallas county real estate made by Mr. Green for the purpose. The price paid for the land was $250 per acre. Mr. Green has informed Dallas that it is his intention to make the place his permanent home. The flower farm enterprise will be chartered with a capital stock of $250,000, practically all to be owned by Mr. Green.

NEW YORK.



The Market.

For several days the most intense heat has prevailed here. At times the temperature has reached 100 degrees in the shade. The enervating effects are seen in every department of the cut flower market. The market was flooded with stock of nearly every kind, for which there was no demand whatever. Prominent retail stores report almost total stagnation. The boys in the small towns, who do not have to pay $5,000 to $15,000 a year rent, may gather some consolation from this when they think business is dull. Some of the wholesalers declared that no such conditions have ever been experienced in the history of the commission flower business. For hours at a time not a single customer could be seen in the wholesale market. Growers of the common grades of stock have been written not to ship their stuff, for not enough can be got out of it to pay the freight.

The next flood in sight will be the aster torrent. Preliminary warnings have already been sent out. Some of the growers have declared their intention of shipping 50,000 a day. It appalls one to figure on how little this stock can hope to realize, unless it be of the very finest quality. There is always a market, every day in the year, for the best of anything, but the day is rapidly approaching when a separate market will have to be maintained for the ordinary and poor shipments and when the wholesaler who caters to the bonton retail trade will accept and sell only that which is of superior quality.

There is another flood in sight. The local shipments of gladioli have commenced. It will be but a few days before enormous quantities of them will be in every wholesale house. Preparations have been made for the handling of greater quantities than ever before, from Childs and Cowee and dozens of the smaller growers in this vicinity.

The death rate has advanced considerably since the period of extreme heat has begun. Some notable funerals during the past week have kept some of the leading retailers busy. The Hay funeral, especially, at Cleveland, called for a great abundance of the best flowers and Messrs. Small and Thorley sent special messengers with the designs ordered here. Mr. Trumpore, of Small's, tells me that never in his experience has he seen a greater display of orchids, some of the wreaths sent aggregating in value from $100 to $200 each.

A very large number of orchids were used in New York last week and fortunately the supply was equal to the abnormal demand. No finer cattleyas have ever been seen here. Mr. McManus reports that prices have held very firm. Carnations, when perfect, bring fair prices, but the enormous quantity of inferior stock can hardly be disposed of at all. Roses are sold without unpacking the boxes in most cases, and as low as 25 cents a hundred for them as they run has been accepted. Sweet peas cannot be given away. Thousands of strings of smilax remained unsold at the close of last week. Street merchants have gone to the summer resorts, and so closed the popular outlet for surplus stuff. Lilies continue excellent in quality and abundant. The Croweanum fern looks very familiar, and is no longer considered a specialty. Several houses are now handling it and the demand for it grows as the price becomes reasonable.

The Triple Alliance.

The Burnham-Hitchings-Pierson Co. has acquired the business interests of the Lord & Burnham Co., Hitchings & Co. and the Pierson-Sefton Co., with offices at 1133 Broadway and a branch office in the Tremont building, Boston. The new company will finish all uncompleted contracts made by the three concerns and the active members of each will continue in the management. There can be no doubt of the efficiency of the new corporation, owning, as it does, all the best patented features of the constructions of the old firms and doing business on economic lines. The company has unequaled manufacturing facilities. The Lord & Burnham Company's extensive iron and woodworking factories and foundry at Irvington, N. Y., cover about six acres and their dock facilities and conveniences for shipping are unequaled. The Hitchings factory at Jersey City has a large capacity and a national reputation and the Pierson-Sefton Company's plant includes two factories. All three industries will continue, as at present, in the manufacture of their specialties.

Various Notes.

As noted briefly last week the Thomas Young, Jr., Co. has been incorporated with a capital of $50,000. The members of the firm are John F. Sharkey, William Sausan and Eugene McAniney. The company will continue the retail business which Mr. Young has established at his several stores. Mr. Young himself, after his vacation in Europe, will give his entire attention to the wholesale business at 43 West Twenty-eighth street. It is hardly necessary to refer to Mr. Young's record as a wholesaler, covering, as it does, so many years of the commission cut flower business. He is probably as well known to the growers of this country as any man who has ever handled cut flowers in America.

The New York club's outing is now but a memory, but there are still echoes from it that will be heard a year from now. If we can change the date so that we may not have to contend against the school closings, and if the committee can decide upon a resort that will please everybody, next year's outing should easily gather an attendance of 500. Enough sports and prizes were provided this year to cover a week of outings.

F. H. Kramer, of Washington, was in town last week with items of interest as to the convention of the Society of American Florists. Nothing has been left undone to make this convention, he says, the greatest in the society's history. A large attendance is certain from New York. In fact, inquiry among the club members indicates that very few will be absent. Arrangements have already been made by many for the excellent accommodations suggested, and Mr. Gudè claims to have fixed things with the weather man so that no discomfort need be feared.

New York will have a bowling team at the convention. Hot weather and honeymoons and "harmony" have combined to make further practice evidently unnecessary. We have such a lot of good bowlers that we have decided that we can make up a club that will make a good run for first honors without any further preparation.

Down at Flatbush last Thursday evening we saw another illustration of how a bowling club can be maintained and good fellowship perpetuated through nearly a score of years. Never a Thursday night in the year can one visit Flatbush and be disappointed. There is always a quorum and an abundance of jollity and enthusiasm. Davy Mellis leaves this week for his month's vacation in the Vermont mountains with his family. Naturally he led all the bowlers and secured all the profits of the evening. The team from Flatbush will probably include Riley, Zeller, Schmutz and one of the Dailledouze boys, in addition to Mr. Mellis, and if they can bowl as well at Washington as they do at home they will bring back some of the handsome prizes of which we are told there will be an abundance there.

Thomas Sharkey, who has been bookkeeper for Thomas Young, Jr., for fourteen years, received his first visit from the stork last week and both the girl baby and its mother are doing nicely.

The vacation season is in full blast. Next week J. Nash, of Moore, Hentz & Nash, will begin his two weeks' outing at Blairstown, N. J. John Kral, head salesman for the same firm, is now on his farm at Port Chester, N. Y., enjoying a three weeks' vacation.

On Thursday last Joseph Volke, foreman for W. H. Seibrecht, and Miss Crozier, of Astoria, were married.

Miss Riley, bookkeeper for J. K. Allen, will be away enjoying her vacation in the mountains until August. The veteran "J. K." himself will take in the Washington convention this year instead of going to Europe. Mr. Allen, in the eighteen years he has been in the wholesale business, has the record of never having disappointed a grower, not once in all that time failing to send on each Tuesday morning a check for every dollar due, a record of which any man has reason to be proud. There are a number of others in the wholesale section who hold similar records for promptness.

Lion & Wertheimer and Schloss Bros. will both have extensive exhibits of their ribbon specialties at the Washington convention. These firms both report an unusual year's business.

The yearly redecoration of the wholesale stores is now in full swing. Closing hour comes earlier every day and quite a number find opportunity to retire from active duty at noon. If the system of early closing could only be made universal among the retailers it would cause general satisfaction. Some of the retail stores actually remain open until 10 o'clock at night and until 6 o'clock on Sunday. These are not only the smaller stores, but the very best in the business maintain this antiquated system, even during July and August. The only result that I can detect is the dissatisfaction of faithful employees, who feel that some concession is due them, at any rate during the "dog days," after ten months of continuous service when no stated hours are possible.

The worst wind and rain storm of a decade visited New York Monday afternoon. J. M. Thorburn & Co. suffered quite a loss by the breaking of a skylight.

Reed & Keller have a large assortment of novelties already packed and ready for early shipment to the S. A. F. trade exhibit. H. H. Berger & Co. will be there with bulbs and imported plants. Julius Roehrs Co. has its usual fine exhibit selected.

Mr. Keller, of Reed & Keller, leaves July 23 on the Deutschland for a trip to Germany.

P. Riley, for many years private gardener for Millionaire Brown, of Flatbush, since the death of that gentleman and the sale of the greenhouse stock has joined the Dailledouze Bros. and is now doing his share in raising as fine carnations and mums as reach the New York market.

The Newport season has opened slowly, but this week sees the majority of the New York force of all having branches there on their way to the strenuous society functions of the 400 in the city by the sea. A great season there is anticipated.

J. Austin Shaw.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

Business the past week has been very quiet. Stock of all kinds is practically gone, that is, good stock, such as roses and carnations. Outdoor stuff seems very poor. The craft in general depends entirely on the northern market for good stock of all kinds. Considerable call has been made for funeral flowers. Among the growers some have housed their carnations. Roses have all been planted and in general look very healthy and the outlook for the coming season is very bright. Among those who are building and rebuilding are Robert Bowlder, Theodore Deidrich and F. H. Kramer, mostly for carnations, as this flower is increasing in popular favor each season.

Convention Matters.

The various committees have nearly completed their work for the coming S. A. F. convention. There will be some slight changes to follow the program. The reception will take place at Carroll hall, a handsome building adjoining the exhibition hall, or on the lawn of Loeffler's park. If on the latter, it will be quite a novelty.

The men's bowling will take place two squares from the exhibition hall. The six alleys are the finest in the country. The ladies will bowl about three blocks from the exhibition hall, on the Sparrows alleys, which are new, having been completed only a month ago. Lunch will be served there by a well known caterer.

The shooting will take place on the well known grounds of Robert Cook. He being one of those jolly good fellows, will take care of the team and see that none will fall into temptation.

On Friday the visitors will take a trip to the United States capitol and thence to the Congressional library, without a doubt the finest building of its kind in the world. After spending two hours there lunch will be served.

Chairman J. R. Freeman expects to get the souvenir book into the printer's hands by the first of August. Superintendent Cook has very little exhibition space left to sell.

Captain Ernest and his team are rather slow, but promise to get together more often after this.

Chairman Gude is letting no grass grow under his feet. He is here, there and everywhere, with Vice-president Freeman, pushing things along. They both claim a big success for the S. A. F. convention. We number now sixty members. F. H. K.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

The month of June proved to be a good one from a business standpoint. There were many weddings, social functions and commencements. Not many were of large magnitude, but enough of medium caliber to uphold the trade. July has started out well and all hope it will continue so. Stock is shortening up considerably and quality is at a premium. Brides and Maids are becoming practically invisible, while Kaiserin and Meteor are exceptionally fine from local growers. Carnations are out of the running altogether, being decidedly poor of color and deficient in substance. There is surely a good opportunity for some wideawake florist to make a hit on summer blooming carnations. Sweet peas were never better than this year, fine color and long stems. Shasta daisies, coreopsis, gypsophila, gaillardia and other hardy perennials are in abundance and used with good effect in window decorations. The price of good stock holds up well. Fine Kaiserins brought $8 per hundred last week, Meteor from $3 to $6, tea roses $2 to $5, Beauties $1 to $2.50 a dozen, carnations $1 to $2 per hundred and sweet peas 25 to 50 cents.

Various Notes.

Again Cleveland lost one of her illustrious men in the death of Secretary John Hay. He was a noble man and the world's best diplomat. The call for flowers was not extraordinarily large, although the principal retailers had some fine work. The price of some designs ran above $100 and the artist was called upon to do his best. The Gasser Co. had a large share of the work, taking care of some foreign orders from Japan, Mexico and elsewhere, also the family work. Smith & Fetters decorated the Chamber of Commerce, where the body lay in state, and also made many designs for prominent people. Miss Eadie was very busy with design work. C. M. Wagner made up several handsome designs for this occasion.

Isaac Kennedy, of West Park, is cutting extra fine sweet peas and Shasta daisies. His Ramblers are a beautiful sight.

Merkel Bros., Mentor, O., are still sending some good carnations and sweet peas to Mr. Wagner.

M. F. Harrison, of Collins & Harrison, is now managing the Ohio Floral Co.

L. C. Hecock, of Elyria; W. H. Jones, of Loraine, O., also Fred Staley, of Lorain, report the best business on record for June. The latter has a magnificent plant, newly built last year.

Frank Smith was visiting relatives in Buffalo for a few days and is now sojourning in Detroit.

L. Greif, president of the Ohio Floral Co., is at Buffalo with the B. P. O. E.

At the club meeting July 10 a committee, consisting of A. L. Brown, C. Schmidt and B. Hart was appointed to find a suitable picnic grounds and report at the next meeting. There was a very large attendance at the meeting. About twelve members anticipate going to the convention. FOREST CITY.

DENVER.

The Market.

Holiday influences and irregular weather had a tendency to curtail the market the past week. The regular summer business is now on and somewhat erratic. Stock is still plentiful, although a greater part of it is not select. Brides and Maids, although small, are of fair quality. Chatenay is perhaps the best of any of them. Carnations are still plentiful, though smaller in size than recently and still quite good. The new stock of American Beauties is commencing to come in and is of fine flower, though not yet of long stem. Sweet peas are arriving in unlimited numbers, some of the stock being of inferior quality and being sold for 20 cents per hundred, with a likelihood of the values going still lower. The Shasta daisy is quite abundant and of good quality. Other outdoor garden flowers are seen but not in large numbers.

Various Notes.

The Park Floral Co. gave its employees the annual picnic on July 4, going to Riverview, up Platte Canon, where a fine pavilion held tables spread for about seventy-five people. With Cavalla's orchestra to discourse fine music for dancing, with prizes for athletic sports, also for the finest collection of wild flowers, made a very enjoyable day. President J. A. Valentine acted as toastmaster and delivered the principal address of the day. All the employees voted it one of the most enjoyable picnics yet given.

D. S. Grimes, the pioneer florist, whose illness we noted in our last communication, died at his home on June 28, the funeral taking place on Friday, June 30.

Mrs. J. A. Valentine and Miss G. E. Page, secretary of the Park Floral Co., left for a trip to California last week, expecting to be gone several weeks.

B. E. Gillis, of the Park Floral Co., and one of our expert bowlers, whose average was 107 in the league, took the prize given by the La Court alleys for high game last week, rolling 214.

E. S. K.

TEWKSBURY, MASS.—E. Winkler is preparing to put up an even-span house 30x100 for carnations.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Earl Metz, who for several years has been with J. C. Murray at Peoria, will come here to enter the employ of Miss Belle Miller.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Midsummer trade conditions are fully up to the general averages among the retailers and wholesalers. The weather is all that we can wish for. Copious rains, with a delightful cool spell since July 4, have made our city an ideal summer resort.

Cut stock is not any too plentiful. Fancy Bride, Maid and Kaiserin are selling well, and so are Beauties, Liberty and Meteor. Some Perles are in, but too soft to sell well. Carnations are in fair supply. A great many of them are field grown. The demand for these is always good for the best stock. Sweet peas are still coming in heavily. These are not moving as fast as they should at the low price at which they sell. The quality is still very good, but stems are very short. More white are being used, as funeral work is about all the florists depend on these days. Lily of the valley is good in supply, with fair demand.

The market is filled up with all kinds of outdoor stuff, which sells slowly and at cheap prices, being used only for window display. Gladioli are coming in more plentifully now and seem to sell well. Fine Asparagus plumosus is in, with good demand.

Various Notes.

The trustees of the Florists' Club have selected Moellenbrock's grove at Horse Shoe lake, on the east side, for the outing. This is a new place for the members and it is said that it is one of the best appointed places that could be found. On the grounds will be fine fishing, boating, bowling, dancing, plenty of music and lots of room for all kinds of games. The arangements are all complete for one of the best outings the club has ever had. The date is next Thursday afternoon, July 20. Those going in the morning will be at North Market street ferry at 8 o'clock. The afternoon time of departure is set for 1 p. m. at the same place. Cards with instructions will be sent to all florists. We hope that all employers will give their employees a day off to attend this outing. As usual, all the wholesale houses will close at noon.

The flower show committee met last week at Weber's store to work on the premium list and other important matters.

S. S. Skidelsky, the man who sells everything in the florists' line, is calling on the trade this week. Mr. Skidelsky says from what he hears that the S. A. F. attendance will be large at Washington.

The committee charged with making arrangements for attending the S. A. F. convention at Washington next month has about completed satisfactory terms with the B. & O. to Cincinnati, and from there to travel with the Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis and possibly Chicago delegations on to Washington. This would surely assure pleasant company all the way.

Last week the Michel Plant and Bulb Co. held an auction of miscellaneous plants at their place on Magnolia avenue. Quite a lot of stock was disposed of.

The Alps Floral Co. has opened for business at the Tyrolean Alps at the World's Fair grounds. Henry C. Ostertag, of Ostertag Bros., is one of the promoters of this enterprise. He reports trade first-class, keeping six young saleswomen busy all the time.

The Market.

Conditions were worse the past week than during any period this year. The bottom has completely dropped out of the market and flowers are hard to move at any price. But for the fakirs there would be very little trade some days and buyers can secure goods at practically their own prices. Roses have slumped heavily and a good many have remained unsold. It is hard to quote prices, which have varied from 25 cents to $4 per hundred on Bride, Maid, Carnot and Kaiserin, a small number making better prices. Outdoor hybrids are practically over. Carnations are a glut. Prices have run as low as 15 cents per hundred and quite good blooms have gone for 25 cents. Very few reached $1. Valley holds up fairly well, but sweet peas, owing to heavy outdoor supplies, are down to from 10 to 20 cents per hundred. There is a limited sale of other flowers coming in. As growers are busy throwing out houses of roses and carnations, a lessened supply of these is likely from now onward.

Exhibition.

There was a splendid exhibition at Horticultural hall on July 8 and 9. The season was a trifle early for sweet peas, but some good displays were made. William Whitman, M. Sullivan, gardener, was first for thirty named varieties. For twelve varieties T. C. Sias, Joseph Thorpe and E. C. Lewis won in order named. Some of the best commercial sorts noted were Hon. Mrs. E. Kenyon, Lord Roseberry, Dorothy Eckford, Gladys Unwin, Miss Wilmott, Lady Grisel Hamilton, Prima Donna, King Edward VII and Duchess of Sutherland.

For fifty vases hardy roses there was a good competition, some fine blooms being staged. M. H. Walsh took first and third and W. A. Riggs, gardener to E. A. Clark, second. Several tables were filled with Iris Kæmpferi. For twenty-five vases Mrs. J. L. Gardner, William Thatcher, gardener, was first and T. C. Thurlow second. There were magnificent delphiniums, the finest ever seen in Boston. For thirty vases, three spikes to a vase, William Whitman won with a superb lot, also taking third prize, Mrs. J. L. Gardner being second. W. Whitman also had the best of several collections of Canterbury bells. There was keen competition for thirty varieties herbaceous plants, Blue Hill Nurseries winning with a splendid table, some of their best vases being Hemerocallis Thunbergii and H. aurantiaca major, Alstrœmeria aurantiaca, Delphinium Barlowi, Ulmaria rubra and Lilium superbum. Bay State Nurseries was second and F. J. Rea third.

There were a number of meritorious honorary exhibits. M. H. Walsh had a large display of cut sprays of Lady Gay, Debutante, Wedding Bells and other rambler roses. Jackson Dawson showed two interesting seedling ramblers, one named Daybreak securing honorable mention. T. H. Richardson had a fine lot of delphiniums. R. & J. Farquhar also staged an extensive lot of delphiniums, gaillardias and other seasonable perennials. There was a fine display of perennial phloxes and Japanese irises from H. A. Stevens Co. and of Dorothy Perkins rose from F. J. Rea.

Robert Cameron showed about 200 vases of herbaceous plants in over 100 varieties, which made a grand display, the largest of the kind seen this season. Blue Hill Nurseries had a long table in addition to their prize winning one. Mrs. E. M. Gill and Mrs. J. B. Lawrence also had displays. From Mount Desert Nurseries, Bar Harbor, Me., Wm. Millar, manager, came one of the largest and most interesting collections of herbaceous perennials seen for a long time. It included large vases of numerous double peonies, liliums, including a fine vase of L. Grayi; delphiniums and a host of other good things. Cheiranthus Marshalli, orange yellow, was much admired. For forty varieties native plants Miss I. C. Shattuck was first and Mrs. Arthur Clark second.

There was a good competition in the classes for strawberries, cherries, currants and other fruits. Vegetables were shown in quantity. For best collection arranged for effect W. W. Rawson was first and W. J. Clemson, J. O. Christensen, gardener, second. The Mycological Society had its initial show of fungi. E. McMulkin contributed numerous palms to use in decorating the large exhibition hall, which was completely filled.

The next exhibition occurs on July 22. During August they will be held weekly.

Various Notes.

E. Sutermeister and son, of Readville, are spending a few weeks at Westford, Me. Mr. Sutermeister still feels some effects of his recent accident.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Reminisky sailed for Europe on July 5.

Mrs. C. C. Lowe, of Pasadena, Cal., was a visitor the past week.

One or two little errors crept into our notes last week. Schnyder & Co.'s new place should have read Woburn and not Waban, and Robert Cameron's superintendency of Harvard Botanic Gardens is fifteen years and not a quarter of a century as given. The latter period would make Mr. Cameron quite a middle-aged man, but his picture shows him to be quite youthful.

Plans are almost perfected for the picnic of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club at Randolph Grove on July 25. Some of the numerous attractions will be boat races on the lake, foot races for all classes, tug of war, leaping, etc. Baseball games betwen gardeners and florists, cricket, tennis and croquet will also be played. A baby show may interest some. A first-class clam bake dinner will be served. Everything points to a large attendance. No pains will be spared to make the day enjoyable for everyone.

The American Society of Landscape Architects held a convention in Boston the past week. On July 7 the parkway system was inspected and visits made to the estates of Prof. C. S. Sargent, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Larz Anderson and Mrs. Edward Brandegee.

BUFFALO.

Various Jottings.

Since the schools are closed and all have graduated a marked stillness has come over our business, except with sweet peas. There is a smallness and unseasonable look about our products, but there is enough to go around. Perhaps in some localities there is a good supply of herbaceous plants, giving the storekeepers their beautiful flowers. Here, and it is safe to say in many cities, there is not a quarter in variety or quantity that there might be.

This being Elks' week in our city, nothing else is thought or talked of. The whole city is decorated and the Main street florists are in the swim. Miss R. Rebstock, C. D. Zimmerman, Joseph H. Rebstock, S. A. Anderson and W. J. Palmer have purple and white in flowers and flags. It is too early in the week to say much about the fearful herd that has invaded the city. Never in our experience have our streets seen such throngs, and they have only just begun. From the electrical displays we hope the visitors will leave Buffalo believing that ours is the electrical city in fact as well as name.

Frank F. Crump, of Colorado Springs, Colo., called on us. He is an Elk, of course, and from here leaves for Europe in a few days and will be back in time for the Washington convention. Harry Balsley is also in town. Harry takes his time in Buffalo and very thoroughly does up the trade. If you don't know your wants in his line he will inspect your place and soon tell you just what you need.

A. N. Pierson gave us a call. Unfortunately we missed him.

Alexander Scott, of Baltimore, made a rather runabout journey from the southern city to Montreal to take ship for the land of his nativity. Of course, this was done to see his friends in Buffalo, but as he arrived at 8 p. m. and left at 4 a. m. next morning there was not much time for festivities.

Not in the city, but within a radius of thirty miles, there has within three weeks been nothing but incessant rain. In many parts the fields are under water. Carnations are drowned. W. J. Palmer has many thousands already benched and is lifting as fast as he can.

William Ehmann, of Corfu, has purchased the houses and property in that village known as the Webb place and lately the property of George Troup. Mr.

Ehmann is a man who will succeed where others fail. First he is an all-round gardener, endowed with a happy disposition and full of energy, industry and thrift. He could not tell you the name of the favorite in the Brooklyn futurity but he can make every foot of bench room yield a good profit. Very few can do both.

Henry Wise, of East Aurora, will spend his vacation among the Muskoka lakes. He has heard of a small lake where the trout will average fifty pounds to the cubic foot of water and the mosquitoes will go two quarts to the same amount of atmosphere.

A trip to the seashore or lake or mountain is grand, but let us hope that these natural and enjoyable trips will hinder only a few from attending our great Washington convention. Our duty is to attend the convention of the society that has done so much for our profession and can and will do much more. Be present and raise your voice or listen to those who have the gall. W. CHICAGO.

The Market.

There has been little change in demand during the past week. Shipping orders continue fairly numerous, but the requirements are small. The city retailers are doing nothing beyond funeral work, helped out by a decoration for an occasional belated wedding.

Really good stock in either roses or carnations is not abundant, but there is a sufficient quantity of that which grades just under the top notch to supply a demand considerably in excess of that which is in evidence. Prices are at the summer level all along the line. During the week the Beauty cut has diminished considerably and there is a call more nearly equal to the supply than has been the case in this department for several weeks. Many teas are mildewed. Receipts of carnations have diminished rapidly, because replanting is beginning.

The first asters are due this week, but the continuous rains of the last few days have done much to injure the quality of the first blooms. Sweet peas continue far in excess of the demand and so do Shasta daisies, which have become the principal feature of most of the window decorations because of their cheapness. Peonies are gone. A few candidum lilies are still seen, but there will soon be plenty of auratums to take their place. There are large quantities of outdoor flowers, which are slow sale in the wholesale market, although the quality is generally very good. Centaurea is among the week's novelties. Water lilies are very abundant. Only a few gladioli are arriving, but there is no active demand for them. There is no limit to the supply of "green goods."

Visitors.

There have been a large number of visitors in town in the past week. Among those who are still here is H. E. Philpott, of Winnipeg. He recently sold his greenhouses and real estate to a hotel syndicate and is on "easy street." He plans a trip to Japan next year.

E. G. Gillett was up from Cincinnati last Friday to talk with the Chicago Florists' Club transportation committee about the trip to Washington. Mr. Gillett wants the Chicago party to travel by way of Cincinnati and join the Cincinnati delegation over the Baltimore & Ohio to Washington. The route of the Chicago party has not yet been determined. Other Cincinnatians who were in town were Max Rudolph and Mr. Meiers.

Wm. Edlefsen was down from Milwaukee and among other things ordered the Louis Wittbold automatic watering device to install in four of his greenhouses.

Wm. Graff was here from Columbus and insisted that some of his old friends should join him in celebrating the arrival of a son and heir a few days ago.

F. J. Foster was up from St. Louis, accompanied by his family, who were en route to Ottawa Beach. Mr. Foster called on many in the trade, but said that he would rather talk horse than business. He has four pedigreed equines in his stable and thinks of bringing one of them to our next horse show.

Thos. H. Zook, of Albia, Ia., was also doing the town.

Various Notes.

Fred Weber is sending E. C. Amling a splendid cut of Beauties. It is remarkable stock for mid-summer. Stems are long, very heavy and well clothed with fine dark green foliage. The buds are almost if not quite as large as the average mid-winter stock and the color is fine. Mr. Amling reports a very satisfactory market for a large cut.

As an evidence of appreciation of the way his teams handled the pick-ups during the strike the wholesalers have presented a handsome ring to George Heinlein, the contractor who supplied the teams and men.

A French journalist who "did" Chicago a short time ago was so impressed with what he saw that he wrote a series of letters for the Tribune, and among the things which he recorded was the fact that the great Pullman Palace Car Co., at its works employing thousands of men, burns 75,000 tons of coal a year! What would have been the measure of his astonishment had he been shown that one local greenhouse plant burns just about that quantity of coal each winter?

Peter Reinberg has increased his Beauty planting about 40,000 plants for next season, making a total around 110,000.

E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., says that in his opinion the season's peony crop, counting good, bad and indifferent, has averaged better than at any time in recent years.

Thomas Boulter, the Highland Park florist who was assaulted by a robber last week, died on Sunday as the result of a facture of the skull. Neighbors on the north shore are making up a purse for his widow, who has a baby born since the assault.

Bassett & Washburn will not plant carnations so early this year as in the past two or three seasons. They think early planting has been carried to an extreme and will not begin until about August 15 this year.

W. J. Smyth is at Lake Marie, where he has a summer home.

Candidum lilies, which have been grown more largely for this market than in previous years, are holding out unusually well. Randall says his crop will last at least through this week.

Louis Wittbold, of the George Wittbold Co., celebrated the Fourth with exceptional ardor this year, because of the arrival of a vigorous son the day before. This is his second. On July 9 Mike Rocklin, of E. H. Hunt's, welcomed a nine-pound boy.

George Wienhoeber, of the E. Weinhoeber Co., started July 11 on a trip to Philadelphia, New York and Boston.

Fred Nelson, of the Wittbold Buckingham place store, has been visiting at his old home in Galesburg.

ROSES A SECOND YEAR.

I have a bench of Golden Gate roses planted last October. We have let them dry out a little, cut them back to eight inches, renovated the soil and think of carrying them another year. Is it wise? The buds are now breaking nicely.

C. P. N.

While not advising the carrying over of stock, as I consider there is more work entailed and more skill required and with less certainty of success than there is in planting young stock every year, there are some expert growers who continually practice this method with good results. This enquirer has gone the right way about it and, with care in keeping off red spider, greenfly and mildew, he ought to succeed. So soon as the leaves begin to expand give plenty of ventilation and syringe twice daily during bright weather. Ribes.

GRADING OF GLASS.

I should be glad to have you tell us how glass factories grade their product, as I find that both double and single strength glass varies considerably in thickness in a lot recently bought. What is the difference between A and B glass?

H. O.

The double strength glass runs about eight to nine lights to an inch. The single runs about twelve to thirteen lights. Occasionally there are factories whose double runs as thin as ten lights to an inch, but the usual average is eight to nine lights.

Regarding grading, when the cutter at the factory cuts up the large sheet from which all glass is cut, as it comes from the flattening ovens, he simply uses his best judgment, putting the glass that is free from blisters and cords in the A grade and the poorer quality in the B grade. No glass is absolutely free from imperfections, but the A grade is supposed to be very free from large blisters or stones that might burn plants.

There is much B glass that is free from imperfections that in any way harm plants and many of the best posted greenhouse men are now using half of their glass in B quality, using the poorer lights on the north side of the houses, or where there is no possibility of their burning the plants. It is well in all cases, when glazing greenhouses, to look over the glass carefully and select the best lights for the most exposed places. It is a mistaken idea that B quality is not as heavy as the A. The only difference between A and B is that the B has more imperfections than the A.

L. E. Partridge.

POSITION OF FLOWS.

I have a house 33x120, heated by hot water. There is a coil under each bench and one on each wall, consisting in the latter case of one 2½-inch flow and two 2-inch returns. The coils under the benches each consist of one 2½-inch flow and four 2-inch returns. I would like to know if this is the best arrangement for them, or whether it would be better to have the flows overhead and divide each coil into two coils. The main flow and return run across the end of the house in the cellar. H. H. G.

If you get a satisfactory circulation with the present arrangement I should not change the plan. If this is not the case, it might be well to run a flow pipe under the ridge, of sufficient capacity (3-inch) to provide for the two coils arranged beneath the benches, leaving the side coils as they now are. Arrange the expansion tank as far above the highest point in the system as possible; ten to fifteen feet is not too much. L. C. C.

THE peony growers report a very gratifying amount of business as a result of the Chicago exhibition.

GEO. T. POWELL says that it is seldom that a perfect specimen of spruce is seen because of too close planting and poor pruning.

NURSERYMEN will be interested in a sketch and portrait of T. C. Thurlow, of West Newbury, Mass., on another page of this issue.

THE American sweet chestnut is a valuable tree, not only for its rapid growth and longevity, but for its profusion of bloom after other flowers are past.

ON a protest of C. D. Stone & Co., an importation of young stock of Carissa Carandas and Dillenia speciosa has been held free of duty as tropical fruit plants for purposes of propagation.

D. S. GRIMES, of Denver, Colo., who was widely known in the nursery trade, particularly as a shipper of seeds of Rocky mountain conifers, died June 28, aged 77 years. A portrait and sketch of his life appeared in the REVIEW of June 29.

MARIE LEMOINE.

I note the item in the REVIEW for July 6 regarding Peony Marie Lemoine. There is but one Marie Lemoine sent out by Calot in 1869, original description "enormous bloom, sulphur white, shaded with pink and chamois tints, strong stems, medium height; very late." On my soil this description hardly will fit the flower, as it is a pure white intermingled with golden stamens that produce a yellowish or sulphurish shading which is but a reflection. The center petals are edged very much like those of Festiva maxima. Couronne d'Or (Calot, 1873), and Helena (Kelway) are very much like it and I doubt if any three experts could pick out the different ones after they were cut and placed in a vase. Time of blooming, etc., are the same with me. Marie Lemoine sent out by Rosenfield, afterwards by Dreer, Harrison, Ward, Betscher, etc., is none other than Achillea, sent out by Calot in 1885 and described as "delicate flesh color, very fresh coloring." I find this rather a very delicate violet flesh and it has a small spot of greenish yellow on the tip of some petals; when left on the plants they become quite a pure white in the fully developed flower; when cut and left in an ordinary room they retain a fleshy color, fading lighter but not white.

In our list of about 1,000 sorts I find a great many that are very similar. About fifty sorts are very similar to Whittleyi; Ne Plus Ultra, fifteen sorts; Edulis superba, twelve sorts; L'Esperence, ten sorts; etc.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

A. A. BERRY, Clarinda, Ia., will spend July and August in the mountains near Beulah, Wyo.

THE Theodosia B. Shepherd Co., Ventura, Cal., says that owing to the depredations of birds they have been compelled to give up growing cosmos for seed, one of their leading specialties for years.

AN Irish grower says that the best late white cottage garden tulip to cut for market is Didieri alba. The blooms, if cut in the bud and put up with a bit of asparagus, would pass for Niphetos roses. It is fragrant.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—The Tinsley Seed Co., at 912 North Broadway, is a seed concern just starting here. It is a branch of the Southern Seed Co., of Louisville, Ky. Mr. Grice, formerly with Schisler-Cornelli Seed Co., is manager.

WHAT is pickle seed, anyway? Will some posted vine seed grower express his views. Years ago if a gardener had asked for pickle seed some seed clerks would have passed him White Portugal onion; others might have given Martynia.

A CHICAGO crop inspector, after an extended tour, covering the marsh districts of Indiana and Ohio, as well as important onion growing sections of Illinois, reports less than two-thirds of a crop of onions standing and conditions such as to promise a worse instead of a better situation by harvest time.

"ON account of the very dry season in the Island of Guernsey," writes a correspondent of the Horticultural Trade Journal, "freesia bulbs will not run a large sample, but what they will lose in size they will gain in quality, as they are well ripened. Many millions of freesias are grown in this island and sent to the English markets. There is no better paying bulb as a catch crop whether under vines or in boxes. They will be dear to buy this season as the freesia bulb crop in France is a complete failure. Early buyers will buy the cheapest."

NOBODY has said anything about beans for some time, and yet all are seeking reliable information.

AN English seedsman is making inquiries as to the growing of Lilium Harrisii for the trade in South Africa.

JAPANESE bulbs are quoted at slightly higher prices than last year, due to increased costs for labor and war taxes.

THE wholesale seed house of the Barclay-Bessonette Co., Temple, Tex., was damaged by fire July 4 to the extent of $1,500; insured.

BERMUDA onion seed, from Teneriffe, each season meets with larger sale in the southwest. Texas gardeners will have little else in onions.

SEED of the Crystal White Wax onion is in good demand at the south. This is the stock that makes the prize white onions that come from Texas.

NEBRASKA growers report that if they can manage to keep the weeds down the sweet corn crop will stand quite a bit more of rain without spoiling.

THE wet weather of the week has brought some of the Chicago onion set growers to the anxious seat. If it keeps on raining they will reach the mourners' bench in due season.

CALIFORNIA SEED CROPS.

C. C. Morse & Co., Santa Clara, Cal., write as follows under date of July 8:

"We have to report, for the benefit of the seed trade who are interested in our crops, that we are experiencing one of the hottest periods of weather we have ever known and crops of all kinds have been seriously hurt within the past few days. Sweet peas, which a week ago promised to be one of the best crops we have ever had, now threaten to be very poor and many varieties will be short. Onion seed threatens to be even shorter than was reported a few weeks ago."

SUIT OVER CUCUMBERS.

Janesville, Wis.—Attorneys Pierce and Fisher of Janesville will try before Judge Honore of Chicago, on July 12, a damage suit in the sum of $76,000, involving the sale of 3,800 pounds of cucumber seed, from which was grown 190,000 bushels of cucumbers, which are claimed to have been not of the variety represented.

The outcome of the damage suit mentioned in the above telegram will be of interest to the seed trade. It is reported that the seed mentioned was bought from a broker in Chicago and when the deal was made neither the buyer nor seller mentioned varieties, further than that "pickle" seed was the article that was being bargained for.

onion sets here will be a little larger than last year. We have had a great deal of rain here lately and little digging has been done as yet, but on the whole the crop will be good quality, and we are anticipating low prices on the start, though sets may advance considerably later.

The market garden crops such as cabbage, potatoes, onions, etc., have sold at very low prices this year and, gardeners being in need of money, will be inclined to sell sets earlier on this account, and those who put them away for storing will hold them for good stiff prices. Hence sets we think will be sold at very much lower prices early than later in the season.

Orchard grass crop from all reports is about fifty per cent of last year's crop and growers are anticipating better prices. Comparatively little seed has been threshed as yet, owing to rain. The quality will be good, though it may be a little discolored.

A combination has been effected among a few men in Kentucky to control the price of blue grass seed this season, and present asking prices are very high. The new crop of this seed turned out not more than half what last year's crop was, but we are not expecting that the present high prices asked will be maintained during the season.

Winter turf oats have turned out fairly well, and we will have a good many cars to ship from this market. As the acreage was limited, however, there will not be near so many as in previous years.

Wheat and oats generally have made good crops, but threshing has been delayed. Corn is growing finely.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—J. Stern, of J. Stern & Co., is now in Europe, buying a large line of florists' supplies.

WINONA, MINN.—The Winona Floral Co., composed of H. W. Rogers and R. G. Gunther, has been declared bankrupt. The liabilities are said to be $1,752.55 and the assets $812.89.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The New Orleans Horticultural Society made its annual trip to Grand Isle to spend Sunday, July 9. A good crowd participated and "a nice time was had by all."

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—The Greenhouse Co., 222 Kearney avenue, Jersey City, has been incorporated to build and operate greenhouses, etc.; capital, $200,000. Incorporators, Preston La Ban, Plainfield, N. J.; Wm. R. Phillips, Jersey City; Sydney A. Williams, New York.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

A general decline in prices, a falling off in trade and a period of quiet has been the report at nearly all the stores the past week. The best customers are leaving for their summer vacations and a corresponding degree of lassitude is found among the growers and store men. Roses are of very poor quality. Carnations in most cases are very good. Outdoor flowers are being sold in large quantities, but not much is realized for them. A number of funerals caused a slight amount of rustling and but for that there would be very little done these days.

Various Notes.

A visit to the growers shows quite a large amount of improvement and the greater part are through with planting.

The Harvey Floral Co. has suspended business, liabilities and assets not known. We are unable to state whether or not this firm will re-open.

Arthur Newell has abandoned his branch store on Walnut street, which will be occupied by a Greek florist.

We understand a new firm will open shortly in the Masonic building, on Walnut street. Plans have been drawn for a refrigerator to be placed in the window in order to care for the cut flowers.

W. H. Humfeld has his houses filled with a fine lot of chrysanthemums, which seem to be doing well and promise good returns.

A. F. Barbee is doing more building this summer. He has two new houses in course of construction. Mr. Barbee has a most up-to-date establishment for retail trade.

Al Broman, of Independence, is sending in some very good roses, considering the heat here, and also some very fine plants.

W. J. Barnes is taking his vacation, having left for St. Louis early in the week.

The Alpha Floral Co. is doing some good business in spite of the hot weather and keeps a very good supply of stock on hand.

F. A. Byrne, formerly with the Kansas City Floral Co., is making arrangements to enter business for himself. A lease has been made on a large store on a prominent street and arrangements will be made to open the first of September.

NARCISSUS.

PITTSBURG.

The cut flower business is at its worst, the weather at its hottest, and nothing doing for anyone. The wholesale houses are busy about one hour in the morning and then the salesmen could go to sleep.

Some out-of-town people are to be seen here, among them, H. T. Miller, of Salem, O.; J. N. Spanabel, E. Palestine, O.; Arthur Langhans, Wheeling, W. Va., and B. Eschner, of Philadelphia.

A very sad accident occurred last Thursday at J. B. Murdoch & Co.'s. A lad about 13 years old was killed by the elevator. As no one saw the accident, it is not known how it occurred.

The W. F. Lauch Florist Co., Big Beaver, Pa., has ben incorporated, with capital stock $10,000; directors, W. F. Lauch, William Langhorst and John P. Maile.

Hoo-Hoo.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting and floral display of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held on July 7. An informal talk upon orchids in general was given by John E. Lager, and the schedule for the annual fall flower show was adopted. In the floral exhibit Lager & Hurrell contributed cut orchid blooms in twelve varieties, while specimen plants from the following collections were shown: William Barr, Arthur Bodwell, gardener, three Cattleya Harrisoniæ, one of which had thirty flowers, and an Odontoglossum Reichenheimii with 126 flowers. Henry Graves, Edwin Thomas, gardener, Cypripediums Brownii, Ashburtoniæ, etc. The Colgates, William Read, gardener, and Stewart Hartshorn, Arthur Caparn, gardener, each a vase of Japanese irises of great size. John Crosby Brown, Peter Duff, gardener, three specimen gloxinias. Douglass Robinson, John Girven, gardener, vases of coreopsis, sweet peas and a collection of vegetables. William Runkle, D. Kindsgrab, gardener, specimen Phyllothænium Lindenii.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Business has settled down to the ordinary summer routine. A few designs occasionally, or a few flowers for a sick friend is about all there is to the demand. As peonies are done and outdoor lilies and gladioli are not in, retail men have to fall back on roses and carnations, which are deteriorating in quality with the hot weather. All the retail men report June as being a fine month, the number of weddings and other calls for decorations making a good demand.

Various Notes.

Among our growers we find them all busy, some tearing out their benches of roses and carnations and replanting, others building new greenhouses or tearing down old ones and rebuilding. We might mention in this connection that a new firm is starting at Weston, under the style and name of Hughes & Jennings. Harry Jennings, one of the firm, is son of R. Jennings, of Brampton, and has been brought up in the business. He has been of late years with J. Gammage & Son, London, and H. Janzen, of Berlin. The firm has bought a nice piece of land at Weston and proposes to put up in the neighborhood of 10,000 feet of glass this summer to grow chrysanthemums, carnations and violets.

J. S. Simmons carried off the honors for decorated turn-outs at the annual open-air horse parade on July 1. Mr. Simmons is quite a horse fancier and takes no small degree of pride in his fine horses and rigs, which, it might be remarked, are quite worthy of it.

We understand that a new store is being opened in what is known as our downtown district, under the name of the Rosery. The College Flower Shop is being closed, the lease having expired and the manager, Mr. Lampert, late of Chicago, will be manager of the new store, which is to be run by the same firm. This store will be fitted up most elaborately and will make a bid for the best trade in Toronto.

W. J. Lawrence has sold the lease of his store at the corner of Yonge and Bloor streets, having gone out of the retail business, and will now devote his whole attention to the wholesale end.

We regret to announce that Mrs. A. E. Moore, of the store styled the People's Florist, is very ill with pneumonia.

D. J.

CAMDEN, N. J.

At a recent meeting of the creditors of L. K. Peacock, Inc., of Atco, N. J., about seventy-five per cent of the creditors, with claims amounting to $6,600, were represented. It was pointed out that a receivership was imminent and there was discussion of ways and means to tide the company over its present difficulty. It was agreed by those present that the coöperation of all creditors be asked, the plan being to extend the credits to June 1, 1906, secured by a mortgage made to a trustee selected by the creditors. A second meeting was called for July 11 at the office of T. B. Hall, 428 Market street, Camden.

PACIFIC COAST.

A. Mitting states that the business at Santa Cruz, Cal., is not a branch of the California Carnation Co., Loomis, Cal., but a separate concern, owned by Mrs. A. Mitting.

Eureka, Cal.—This is a town of 11,000 inhabitants and Henry Dehm, who is one of the three engaged in the trade here, says that from a trade point of view the locality is a long way behind the times but steadily improving. There is a good future before any one prepared to push the business.

SOME CALIFORNIA LILIES.

It is surprising how little is known by the coast gardeners and nurserymen about our native lilies. We have several varieties that grow wild in many portions of California that as garden flowers are far superior to anything we can import, both regarding hardiness, freedom of bloom and adaptability to surroundings.

Most of the dealers handle only L. Harrisii, longiflorum, candidum, auratum and other Japanese and European grown bulbs which, although they may do well enough the first season, never last long enough to make a reappearance. They will not compare with our native lilies where hardiness and a long succession of beautiful and showy flowers is desired and it only needs some one to interest himself in these valuable native lilies to create a good demand for them.

The first variety I shall mention is Lilium Washingtonianum. This is a native of the Sierra Nevada mountains and grows at an elevation of from 3,000 to 6,000 feet. The flowers much resemble those of L. album and are borne on stiff stems from four to six feet high, many of the stems having as many as twenty-five flowers. This variety is very hardy and the bulbs multiply rapidly. The blooms are very sweet and keep for several weeks. The season for blooming is from June to August and a field of them in their native habitat is never to be forgotten.

The native tiger lily, Lilium pardalinum, easily comes next in point of value. These plants usually grow in clumps of several hundreds and are always found in the rich soil of stream banks or of wet, springy places. The flowers are from six to eight inches across, with orange base and scarlet tips, spotted with purple on the lower half. I have seen as many as thirty-five blossoms on a single stem, with half of them opened at one time. They are strong, hardy growers and do well in ordinary garden soil.

Lilum Humboldtii is equally as beautiful as the foregoing and is usually found in high and dry localities. I have never seen it growing in wet places and it grows in cultivation and succeeds admirably with almost no moisture. The flowers of this lily are much larger than those of the other two and show more of the yellow shades and less of the red and brown.

The Redwood lily, Lilium rubescens, I consider also one of our most charming natives. It is very fragrant and the flowers easily keep for two weeks. It resembles L. Washingtonianum somewhat, except that its flowers are fuller in form, with wider petals and shorter tube and it has a very small bulb. It sends up a shaft from five to seven feet high with a bunch of flowers at first pure white with purple dots, but afterwards taking on a metallic lustre and finally turning to a ruby purple. The favorite haunts of this lily are high and inaccessible ridges under the live oaks and redwoods.

The Coast lily, Lilium maritimum, is found very abundantly in the edges of the mountain ranges and does well when transplanted in the garden. The flowers are bell-shaped, from five to ten on a stem and of a deep blood red color spotted with purple. They do not grow as tall as the other varieties mentioned but are very showy and stay in blossom a long time.

The Alpine lily, Lilium parvum, another of the smaller growing kinds, makes a pretty garden plant. It is also in bloom at this time and its orange colored flowers make a very pleasing contrast with the other varieties.

There are several other native sorts I might mention but these I think are the best for garden planting and in this climate they certainly are more satisfactory than anything I have seen among imported bulbs. It takes them usually about three seasons to become established when they are transplanted from the woods, but when once they become well started they multiply with great rapidity and a mass of them blooming always attracts considerable attention, even here, where flowers are so plentiful, and the fact that they are native California lilies never seems to be fully realized by our flower lovers, for when told that they can be found by millions in our mountain ranges they usually seem disappointed that they are not some new creation in the flower line or have not come from some far-off tropical clime.

G.

CALLA ROT.

There seems to be a great deal of complaint from florists about the soft rot in callas. I wish to state that the disease should cause no alarm to the florist. A bulb, although half destroyed, will yet produce a perfect bloom, which dies only when the disease has affected the sprout. I would advise all who plant callas for the blooms to treat all bulbs with a solution of corrosive sublimate and plant in individual pots.

H. L. Musser.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are having the warmest weather we have experienced thus far this year. Carnations have held their own, but if the cool breezes for which San Francisco is famous do not soon materialize they will take a decided drop in color and substance. The wholesalers are charging from $1 to $2 per hundred for them and a few extra choice still bring a higher price. Roses are scarce, with the exception of the poorer quality of stock, which can be had at almost any price. Sweet peas are also beginning to show the results of the warm spell and are becoming shorter of stem and with poorer keeping qualities. Gladioli of all kinds are plentiful, also most outdoor stock. Lily of the valley and Lilium longiflorum are offered in just sufficient quantities to supply the demand. Some very good cattleyas are sent from Alameda county but there has been little demand for them for several weeks. Everyone is looking for cooler weather and it has been predicted to arrive in a few days.

Various Notes.

K. Sato, of Saratoga avenue, Elmhurst, is building four more carnation houses, each 25x200 feet.

A. D. Miller is on a two weeks' visit to Portland, Tacoma and Seattle.

L. M. Barrett, for many years a grower of fine sweet peas and other hardy stock, has decided to embark in the growing of cut flowers under glass and will immediately commence the erection of two large houses on his grounds in Berkeley.

R. M. Critchlow has returned from a month's trip to Santa Rosa and Sebastopol.

Gill's Floral Depot has purchased the stock and fixtures of J. T. Shepherd, who has retired from the business.

The agitation against the Japanese growers is still being waged by the wholesalers and something definite is likely to be attempted regarding furnishing stock to the retailers who persist in handling Japanese grown stock. G.

Which is the cheapest and best—gas at $1.50 per thousand cubic feet, coke at $9 a ton, or hard coal at $12 a ton?
H. A. K.

With gas at $1.50 per thousand cubic feet, coal would be worth $45 per ton, i. e., a ton of good anthracite coal at $45 would be equal to 30,000 cubic feet of gas, which is the basis of the equivalent in fuel value. There is not much difference in the heat units in the coke and coal. It will take twenty-five or thirty per cent more coke than hard coal with ordinary firing. With the coke at $9 it is the cheaper of the three fuels mentioned. L. C. C.

Hannah Hobart

The Pride of California

The grand prize winner in competition with the latest and very best products in Carnations, east or west, for the last eight years.

Mr. John A. Balmer, of Clealum, Washington, after his visit to our nurseries in January, 1902, wrote an article for a trade paper in which he said: "The Hannah Hobart is really a remarkable flower, never less than four inches, and frequently four and one-half inches across. In color it is a shade deeper than Lawson, but the petal arrangement is quite different, in this respect it most resembles the old Jubilee, but of course the color is different. I saw two large houses of it at Sievers', and the sight is one long to be remembered, hundreds of blooms and not a poor one in the lot, and everyone the exact counterpart of the other, no burst calyxes, but every flower supported on a 24-inch stem, and standing up like soldiers. There is certainly no carnation of its color that can equal it."

The above is a truthful statement of facts by a very competent gentleman, and if needing verification, the simple assertion that the flowers of this magnificient variety of Carnation have been sold wholesale as high as $1.50 per dozen, and none less than $1 per dozen up to date, should be enough to convince anybody of its intrinsic value. (See illustration of an average bloom in the Florists' Review, June 1, 1905.)

The constant inquiry by everyone who has seen the plants in flower is: "When will the Hannah Hobart be for sale?" This led us at last to the conclusion to distribute the same next year, and we are ready to book orders from now on for delivery beginning Jan. 1, 1906. Send your orders in early because they will be filled strictly in rotation.

Price, $3.00 per 12; $15.00 per 100; $120.00 per 1000.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business the past week was fairly good, about up to the general average for this time of year. The supply of stock is still pretty heavy, but the quality is away off. Beauties come very small and pop right open, but the color is good and they hold fairly well when open. Other roses are very poor. Carnations go to waste in large quantities owing to the poor quality. Other stock is as last quoted.

Various Notes.

The newly elected board of directors of the Cincinnati Florists' Society held a meeting July 7 and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Wm. Murphy; vice-president, Ben George; secretary, C. J. Ohmer; treasurer, D. Rusconi. These officers will be installed at the next regular meeting of the society, which occurs on Saturday evening.

W. K. Partridge is still cutting some first-class roses, perhaps the best to be seen in this city.

Charles Jones has been a little under the weather and is talking of spending a few days at French Lick, Ind.

Peter Weiland has sold a half interest in his business at New Castle, Ind., and Cincinnati, to Peter Olinger, of Aurora, Ill. Mr. Olinger will take charge of the wholesale house in this city October 1.

John J. Wonderlie, of St. Louis, was a recent caller.

E. G. Gillett was in Chicago July 7, talking over the plan for Chicago joining Cincinnati and St. Louis on the trip to the S. A. F. convention. No decision was reached. The Cincinnati delegation will go via the B. & O. C. J. Ohmer.

NEW CASTLE, IND.

Peter Weiland has sold a half interest in his plant to his brother-in-law, Peter Olinger, of Aurora, Ill., and the price paid is said to be a handsome one. The deal takes effect immediately and Mr. Olinger, who was here a few days ago, has gone to his home to close out his dry goods business and will remove to Cincinnati about October 1 to take charge of the wholesale end of the plant. Mr. Weiland will devote his time to the growing end.

Two new houses have been recently added to the already large plant, making twelve in all. The new ones will be used exclusively for carnations, while roses will fill the other ten. Another improvement just completed is the laying of 2,100 feet of sewer.

ROME, N. Y.

The C. B. Humphrey greenhouse property was offered for sale July 6, by the owner, the auctioneer being John Dowd, of Utica. Only one bid was received, that being from a Utican at $7,000. A Rome florist desires to put in a bid and the sale was held open till noon, July 10. The premises have a frontage of 165 feet on Chatham street and 150 feet deep, containing ten greenhouses and an eleven-room house. There is a natural gas well on the premises and the greenhouses are well stocked. On account of his health, Mr. Humphrey will locate in California, where he spent the past four winters. He has invested in real estate there.

The Market.

Business is taking on the summer dullness, although the best grades of stock are cleaned up at fair figures. There is a good supply of both roses and carnations in the market and the quality averages well for this season of the year. The market was stimulated the latter part of last week by the funeral of the chief of the fire department. His body was lying in state in the city hall rotunda, surrounded by a wealth of flowers and floral designs of all descriptions. Jas. Chacona had charge of the decorations and floral pieces. There were upward of fifty set pieces and about the same number of various bunches and baskets. Among the most notable ones were an 8-foot cross sent by the common council, a 5-foot panel by Fire Co. No. 1, a great many large broken wheels, wreaths, gates ajar sent by the different fire companies and quite a number of large emblems from clubs, lodges and civic societies of which the chief was a member. In all it was one of the finest displays of floral work ever seen here. Nearly all the florists received some share of the work.

Club Meeting.

At the regular monthly club meeting July 5 the members were treated to a surprise in the presence of some of the members of the Chicago Florists' Club. Phil Hauswirth, Ed. Winterson, August Poehlmann, Geo. Asmus and J. C. Vaughan made a flying visit and helped matters along considerably on the coming convention at Washington, as well as creating more enthusiasm on the local show in the fall. There was quite an attendance at the meeting. Incog.

Negaunee, Mich. — The Negaunee Nursery and Greenhouse Co. has had a fine display of peonies and has taken many orders for fall planting. The flowers were at their best here the first week in July.

Aurora, Ill.—The largest wedding decoration put up in this city for a long time was that for the Simpson-Welch ceremony on June 29. The Aurora Greenhouse Co. had the order and used large quantities of pink flowers, including peonies, roses and sweet peas, besides a large number of decorative plants.

MANCHESTER, MASS.

The North Shore Horticultural Society held a very successful rose show in the town hall on July 6, it having been postponed from June 28 on account of the lateness of the season. The general verdict was that the exhibition was the best the society has yet held.

William Swan, gardener to Mrs. R. C. Hooper, was first for twelve varieties, six varieties, twenty-five bottles assorted and Killarney and second for Mrs. John Laing. F. Brasch, gardener to Mrs. McMillan, won a leg on the J. H. Troy silver cup for best display of garden roses, also the bronze medal for best display filling one of the society's tables and second for best general display. The silver medal for display arranged for effect was captured by Thomas Vooneveld, gardener to Mrs. H. L. Higginson. Mrs. W. B. Walker, Thomas Jack, gardener, was first for best display of named varieties two blooms of each, and also for best display of tea roses, of which there was a nice showing.

Other prize winners included Miss Mark Clark, R. Newman, gardener to S. V. R. Crosby; F. W. Whitehouse, F. Minkin, gardener, and Mrs. H. C. Pierce.

There were very fine displays of sweet williams, pelargoniums, foxgloves, herbaceous flowers, Canterbury bells and other seasonable flowers, the prizes going to Miss Bartlett, Mrs. W. B. Walker, Mrs. J. E. Cabet, Mrs. R. C. Hooper, Miss A. G. Thayer, J. McGregor, gardener; W. Allen and T. Jefferson Coolidge, P. R. Sandborn, gardener. Mrs. J. M. Lane, H. Shaw, gardener, had the best display of strawberries and Philip Dexter, J. Salter, gardener, the finest collection of nymphæas and other aquatics. T. D. Hatfield officiated as judge of the whole show, comprising sixty-eight classes.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Cultivation and Hoeing.

It is strange that so level headed a man as W. S., and such a close observer, should get mixed up on the subject of capillary attraction. W. S. states that hoeing, by loosening the surface, enables the moisture to escape and draws up more moisture from below. The very reverse is true. The sun's rays draw up moisture by means of capillary attraction. That is, minute passages are formed to the surface, by means of which moisture rises and escapes into the air. Hoeing and cultivation break up these water tubes and thus retain the moisture below. These tubes form again in a week or so. Rain or watering also pack the ground and conduce to their rapid formation. Hence the necessity for frequent stirring of the surface.

This principle is well understood in California. I once worked on an orchard there where no rain fell from May to October. The surface soil was reduced to dust for a thickness of four inches and regularly cultivated once a week. Below this dust blanket moist soil was always to be found. Just outside the orchard and on the same kind of soil, a sandy loam, was a brick field. Here one could see soil dug out twenty feet deep and as dry as possible. In the brick field the rain which had fallen in the winter had all escaped into the air by means of capillary attraction. In the orchard it was unable to get through the dust blanket and remained in the soil to benefit the trees.

HAIL INSURANCE.

During its eighteen years of practical operation the Florists' Hail Association of America has paid, up to the beginning of the present season, 870 losses, aggregating a little more than $81,000. It has been found that the average cost of insurance per annum on single thick glass is 6⅔ cents per square foot and on double thick glass 5 cents per square foot. The first assessment on single thick glass is 8 cents per 100 square feet and on double strength 6 cents per 100 square feet. Subsequent assessments are levied as needed and 5 cents per square foot for single thick and 7 cents per square foot on double thick paid to members for glass broken by hail. The cost of management is nominal, so that the association has a reserve fund of $13,500, insuring over 22,000,000 square feet of glass for more than 1,400 members. E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind., is president of the association and J. G. Esler, Saddle River, N. J., has been secretary since its organization. In writing to Mr. Esler as to the cost of insurance, give not only the length of the several houses but the length of the sash bars on each side, also state whether single or double strength glass is used.

SEEDS.

In raising any seeds, some consideration should be given to natural conditions. Take the Clematis vitalba as an instance. It ripens and falls on moist ground in the autumn, and there it remains until we get the warm sunshine in spring, when it is ready to start; and when it is collected for commercial purposes it is probably kept dry with the result that when it is sown in spring the hard shells do not get sufficiently softened before we get dry hot weather; but if the seed is put into moist sand and kept in a cool place, it will germinate freely when sown. Much the same thing may be said of rose seed; they should never get thoroughly dried. There are other seeds which ripen early in the summer, and lie on the ground for a long period; these cannot be kept too dry after they are collected, yet with these, germination may be assisted by soaking them for a short time before sowing.—Horticultural Advertiser.

THE OLD-FASHIONED FLOWS.

I have a greenhouse 12x16 that I want to heat in the old-fashioned way, with a brick furnace and tile piping under the middle bench. How large a furnace will be needed to keep 60 to 65 degrees in the winter weather in the latitude of Cincinnati? C. E. E.

It is not possible to accurately calculate the size of a furnace necessary to heat a house by means of a flue, as is the case with hot water or steam. While a furnace of moderate size will undoubtedly do the work satisfactorily, the size of the furnace should be governed by the kind of fuel to be used. If hard or soft coal is the fuel, a furnace twelve inches wide by two feet deep and fifteen inches high, with an adequate ash-pit should answer the purpose. If cord-wood is to be the fuel, I should make the firebox about two and one-half to three feet long, so as to use half-length cord-wood.

A grate three feet by eighteen inches with a firebox eighteen inches high and an adequate ash-pit will be ample and will be more economical to fire than a smaller furnace requiring finer wood. The efficiency of this plan of heating will depend quite as much upon the arrangement of the flue as upon the size of the furnace. If instead of arranging the flue through the center of the house it can be carried around the house and discharged into a chimney constructed on top of the furnace, the most efficient arrangement will be secured. L. C. C.

PIPING TWO HOUSES.

We are building two greenhouses, and would like to know how to pipe them with 2-inch pipes, there being four benches in the wider house, which is 26x120, eleven feet to the ridge. The other house is 10x120 and eight feet to the ridge. In the larger house it requires 65 degrees and in the smaller 60 degrees in the most severe weather in northern Illinois. How should the pipes

DOES not allow any fine coal to go into the ashpit. It burns it all. Will pay for itself several times over each season in the saving of fuel. Put in a trial set now. Burns any coal and is especially adapted for the cheaper grades, such as slack and screenings. No change required in your furnace. Anyone can set it in place.

be distributed to do away with the very annoying hot and cold ends which are often found in greenhouses? J. B.

The house 26x120, if heated with hot water at 180 degrees, should be provided with a 3½-inch main flow pipe arranged to supply seventeen 2-inch returns. The house 10x120 will require a 2½-inch flow pipe, returning the length of the house through eight 2-inch returns.

Yes, it is quite possible to do away with the warm and cool ends of greenhouses. This can be more easily and cheaply accomplished with steam than with hot water, and also more easily where the main flow is carried to the most distant end of the house under the ridge than when smaller flow pipes are used and arranged under the benches. When steam is used and the main flow is carried to the most distant end of the house under the ridge and there divided to return under the benches in an adequate number of returns there is seldom any trouble with uneven temperatures, but with no other system of piping have I been able to secure as even a temperature. L. C. C.

METHOD OF HEATING.

I am planning to erect an even-span house 30x100 in a sheltered location, boarded on the north and with two feet of glass on the south side. The temperature required will be 50 to 55 degrees in the coldest Massachusetts weather. The land is such that I cannot sink a boiler more than four feet. I have a sixty horse-power tubular boiler, but I must dispense with a night fireman. If I use a steam trap to return condensation could I get an appliance which would automatically ring a bell in my sleeping room if the steam pressure went below the point necessary to operate the trap, or would you advise me to have larger openings cut in the boiler and turn it into a hot water system? If so, how large openings would be necessary? How many runs of 2-inch pipe would be required if hot water was used and how many runs of 1¼-inch pipes if steam was used? E. W.

Yes, it will be possible for you to arrange an automatic alarm to indicate minimum steam pressure as you suggest, but if you have only one greenhouse of the size indicated to be heated by a sixty horse-power tubular boiler it would, in my judgment, be better for you to plan a hot water system rather than a steam system until you have sufficient glass to warrant you in employing a night fireman. The boiler you have undoubtedly has a 4-inch connection on top and 2½-inch or 3-inch connection for the return. If so it will be ample for either steam or hot water. If you use steam the main flow pipe should be 2½-inch and arranged to supply eighteen 1¼-inch pipes. With hot water the flow pipe should be 3½-inch and arranged to supply sixteen 2-inch returns the length of the house. This will provide sufficient radiation to furnish heat for carnations. L. C. C.

CHICAGO.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Mrs. Gunnar Teilmann, of Marion, Ind., is in the hospital here, where she underwent a serious operation, July 6. She stood the ordeal well and is convalescing as rapidly as could be expected.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Business is at a standstill, nothing doing beyond the call for funeral work. Asters are coming in but are small. A few carnations are still to be seen but the quality is poor.

Jacob Schulz is building a very handsome store on Fourth avenue. The front will be of stone.

Jos. Coenen has sold out his interest in the business to his partner, John Bohrman. Mr. Coenen is disposing of all his property and intends to locate in Los Angeles, Cal. The florists of Louisville wish our good old comrade all success in his undertaking.

Nanz & Neuner, of St. Mathews, are tearing down a couple of old houses and building new ones in their place.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Marret and their daughter, Victorenia, have gone to Buffalo to attend the Elks' reunion.

Fred Schulz, son of Jacob Schulz, was married July 3 at St. Martin's church, to Miss Anna Shaady. Congratulations are in order.

The Kentucky Society of Florists held the meeting of July 11 at A. Rassmussen's place in New Albany, Ind.

Nick Riehlman, who was formerly employed in Cave Hill cemetery, is putting up a very large greenhouse at Eden Side, which will be planted to carnations.

HY LICHTEFELD.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

G. Van Bochove & Bros.' new place on the south side is a model of neatness and the houses are built after the latest style and are certainly a credit to this enterprising firm. Here roses are grown entirely and are looking exceedingly well. John Westveer, foreman at the old place, is busily engaged to get the planting done. Smilax and other greens are grown here in quantity, also some very fine mums can be seen.

The Dunkley Floral Co. has bright prospects for good crops the coming season. Roses are all planted and a house of Golden Gate and Bride and one planted to Meteor are very fine for this time of the year. By the end of this week they will have finished planting carnations, chrysanthemums and violets. A small house of calla lilies are coming in bloom and are looking fine. Staking and tying has commenced and the place is in good shape.

The Central Michigan Nurseries have moved their whole plant from the north to the south part of the city, and no expense has been spared to make their plant a model one. Mr. Smith, the superintendent, is busily engaged in planting as fast as the houses are completed, and several houses are planted already and are looking fine. They would have been further advanced, but the rains we had here delayed work. H. M.

ENID, OKLA.—Mrs. I. E. Tarr & Son, who conduct the Kenwood Greenhouses, are building a new house 14x88 feet. Trade is slow just now but they look for good business this fall.

TWEMLOW'S

Old English Glazing Putty

For Bedding Glass in Sash or for Filling Cracks or Seams In Roof Joints or Frames of Greenhouses or Hotbeds.

It is used in Machine or Bulb. If too thick for bulb thin with a little Pure Linseed Oil, boiled. So thinned, it can be brushed into any crack or leak, making a solid filling. It makes a solid bed, impervious to moisture, and holds glass in its place, and will stop any crevice or fault. When once set on dry wood it does not heave. As regards the goods, the article is no new invention, but simply an article of the very best class, to do thoroughly good work, like old-time gentlemen expected when sashes were made with lead, and small panes of glass used that caught the water and leaked unless set with an elastic putty, which once set by a mechanic was expected to remain, and did remain in good shape. This Twemlow's Old English Glazing Putty does; nothing more, nothing less. SOLD BY THE FLORISTS' SUPPLY HOUSES.

A SUMMER WINDOW.

A good-sized stump with a short, broad branch on the left, banked at the back and right side with Boston ferns and auratum lilies is the center of the window display illustrated this week. The floor of the window is covered with sheet moss as usual. Grouped in front of the stump, close up to it to resemble the habits of growth, are a few small ferns in pots. A wide brimmed sun hat is nailed on the branch of the stump and filled with coreopsis. A small dish containing water is easily concealed in the crown of the hat, and the flowers straggle out from it in every direction. A rent is made about half way around the crown on the right and some of the flowers are drawn through backward till they hang out from under the edge of the brim. The vase holding the stems of these flowers should be covered with moss and other green.

In the rear of the window, towards the left, is a small group of yellow calceolarias. All the pots of these groups of growing plants are covered with moss. In attempting a wild scene like this, every trace of greenhouse "fixings" should be hidden.

One detail in this study should be observed; namely, there is a way out, apparently. Some opening or parts should be left, having the appearance of leading out or back. Vacancies are a rest to the eye and make a depth to a window which no amount of filled space can ever do. This opening or vista need not be very large, but its presence somewhere is an essential feature of a good window picture. The coloring here is yellow, brown blending with red in the coreopsis and auratums.

GERTRUDE BLAIR.

EXHIBITION PIECES.

Now is the time to begin planning for fairs and flower shows, which require or ought to require, designs of a special class. Too often, where an award is offered for the best flower design, a funeral design is chosen for competition, from lack of experience or interest, and too often the general public gets the impression that design work is confined to that class. Funeral designs on wire frames, with the exception of large, fine ones, upon which there are opportunities for the display of excellent material and fine arrangement, are fast being pushed to the rear by loose sprays and clusters.

If you want to be in the lead in your community, show how to make other flower designs of a happier kind. In order to make such work worth while, plan with the officials and superintendent of the flower department. Have them understand the expense of preparing such work and give them to understand that if they want an attractive display, premiums of considerable value must be offered. Most officials will pay attention to your interests if properly presented, especially in the agricultural and horticultural societies. Much depends upon the location and surroundings in the exhibition hall. Good light, with freedom from draughts, are the most important requirements. Cold storage cases with plate glass fronts are next in order. These are only reasonable needs where flowers must be on exhibition twenty-four hours before being judged and several days after.

Collections of flowers, both general and specific, are as a rule, the most poorly displayed of any exhibition pieces. Despite the fact that flowers are supposed to keep well in damp sphagnum, it really makes very little difference. By all means have the stems in water. Have one collection in a tall vase and another in a basket of convenient shape and size to hold a dish of water to fit. In another have a bowl or pan of water covered with bark or ferns. Use one or two of your mantel pans with a raffia covering, or fill a birch bark canoe with some one of the collections. Where a hand bouquet is among the entries, the longer stemmed flowers can be made to reach the water in a tall vase. Make the shower bushy enough to stand out from the vase. This will be the most difficult exhibit to hold in good shape as it cannot be sprinkled on account of the ribbon, nor is it possible to arrange with the best effect and have any considerable amount of the stems reach the water.

If difficulty is met in keeping flowers in place in shallow dishes, put in a network of wire across the top of the pan, or fill the pan with stiff green down in the water and insert the stems as into sphagnum, minus the picks, of course.

Among the designs which are not too commonly seen in exhibitions might be named an automobile, a chariot, a spray in a frame like a picture, a harp or lyre in festive arrangement or a picture hat. For either of the first two, one dove perched on the front with ribbons attached to two flying doves in front, might be attractive for an elaborate piece. Any of the familiar color combinations would be suitable, being careful to make the body of the piece either in one color or shaded, rather than a mixture. Then fill in what flowers are in the top of a decidedly different color and kind, remembering that striking contrasts will best serve your purpose.

Make the spray in the frame like a panel on a background of rich foliage, like bronze galax or ivy. Make an elaborate frame from roses or some striking color in garden flowers. Pin the spray securely to the background and suspend like a picture. The long panel will be the best shape.

A Summer Show Window.

A picture hat can be made entirely of flowers, crown and upper and under brim. Pansies, cornflowers in blue and purple, with light pink asters and a wreath of pink roses or a plume of delicate green would work in well. Adiantums for the upper part of the brim would work in properly.

The harp or lyre can be made of either green or some solid color in flowers, with a broad base filled with a variety of flowers and a great cluster falling through the strings forward at their base. Bronze the strings and set some tall flowers in behind them to show from the back through the strings.

A FLORIFEROUS BULB.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a freak lily flowered this season by Wm. Hollinsworth, gardener to A. E. Austin, Esq., Pawtuxet, R. I. The bulb was a 7-9 Japanese longiflorum and produced three stems, the center one having so many buds that the flower head was like that of a big, white coxcomb. The plant made fifty-three buds, of which forty-two developed, thirty-four on the center stem and four on each of the side stems. The foliage on the center stem was almost as badly crowded as were the flowers, for it had also multiplied in the same ratio as the flowers. The photograph was taken on the Friday before Easter.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Work of the Day.

Outside of our two principal products, there is not much to sow or to reap for the next month or so, but there is always work for the industrious florist. There is no excuse for weeds in the field or garden. Plants in pots plunged out of doors want faithful watering.

Azaleas that were put out in early June will have grown considerably by this time. Do not let them get crowded and while shifting them about is a good time to give them an inch of mulch, which can be almost all cow manure, not too much decayed. If the plants are healthy and vigorous they will relish the manure. The same with any of the acacias or metrosideros or any hard-wooded plants that you are keeping over in pots. They need lots of water and a mulch is of much benefit.

Rambler Roses.

If your ramblers that you started from dormant plants in April have made a long, stout growth they can, at the end of the month, be put outside. Do not set them on any material that they can root into or they will keep on growing, which you do not want. You want them to nicely ripen the canes they have made, so set them on boards, but surround the pots with leaves or litter, or some material to keep the sun from drying them out continuously, for the pots are very full of roots. Don't shift them either; reserve that until you begin to start them into growth next January, when they need something for their new, active roots. Keep them watered for a long time yet, as the buds they are now making are what will give you the trusses of bloom for next Easter.

Calla Lilies.

Richardias that you grow in pots should be started at once. We treat this old favorite often as an herbaceous plant, mostly for economy's sake, to make room for bedding plants on our benches, and lay the callas under the benches after Easter. Get them up, shake off all the old soil and put into 5-inch or 6-inch pots and start them growing plunged outdoors. They will make a stout, robust growth in the broad sun if given a copious supply of water and I think you will get more flowers from plants in pots than from those planted out. A bright, warm house is what they need if you expect them to flower. They are tropical and in a house where it is only 45 degrees at night the calla will only linger along and be no source of profit.

String the Smilax.

If you planted a new bed of smilax about July 1, don't delay putting strings to it. It is a terrible waste of time to let it grow and get tangled up; not only a waste of time but an injury to the first crop.

Euphorbias.

We all grow some Euphorbia Poinsettiana but few grow the beautiful Euphorbia Jacquiniæflora. Euphorbia splendens is of no use to the florist, a thorny bush of no value, but E. Jacquiniæflora is a lovely plant and easy to grow. It is seldom grown as a pot plant and grows much more freely planted out on a side bench in a warm house. If you have any plants propagated last spring (they root either from the old wood or the young, green growth) plant them at once in five inches of soil and with one pinching of the leading shoots they will reward you with a number of their slender, drooping sprays studded with numerous orange-scarlet bracts. It was once an indispensable winter flowering plant, but has been neglected. The correct name is E. fulgens Jacquiniæflora.

Poinsettias.

There is so much written about the popular poinsettia (which is also a euphorbia) that you are not likely to neglect them. If you grow any for cutting I would remind you that they are much easier to manage if grown planted on a bed or bench, for when they have plenty of root room they will endure a lower temperature. Let the soil be firm, five or six inches deep and plant young stuff from 2½-inch or 3-inch pots. You can plant now or for another month. Old stumps you have been propagating from all summer are difficult to make much of in pots. If planted out in a bed you will get a number of good bracts from them. If this is done in September they will make a useful growth.

Hydrangeas.

Don't neglect your young Hydrangea Otaksa that are intended for next spring sales. Don't shift to larger pots unless their roots are cramped for room, but let each plant have light and air around it and never let them wilt for want of water. Plants of these are now imported every fall for forcing. What we have seen of them are well furnished with flowers, but not as compact, bushy plants as we can raise at home.

brown and appear polished or shiny. This makes its appearance after the plants are transferred from the greenhouse to frames or field and this season has almost disappeared, but last year we lost an entire block of Queen of the Market with it. G. J. B.

The trouble seems to be a rust. If this trouble develops after the plants are transferred to the field t is more than likely that it began when the plants were crowded in the flats, under glass, and were kept too close and damp. The appearance of the leaves is very much the same as the rust on chrysanthemums, which it is almost impossible to stop if it once has a good start. We would advise, as a preventive another year, that you do not crowd the asters in the flats, giving them full light and plenty of ventilation and soon after transplanting from the seed pans to flats give them a syringing with the copper carbonate or Bordeaux mixture. W. S.

WILLIAM MURPHY.

There was a genuine though "safe and sane" celebration of the Fourth of July on a farm near Quincy, Ill., in 1857, for on that day the Murphy family, residing there, welcomed to membership a baby boy, subsequently named William. Eight years later the parents removed to their home near the present location of Mr. Murphy's greenhouses, just outside of Cincinnati. Here the boy worked in his father's vegetable gardens, until, in 1883, he began growing bedding plants and cut flowers for the Cincinnati market. Three years later he determined to devote his interests exclusively to carnations, being at that time the only florist there who made this flower a specialty. He employed such varieties as DeGraw, La Purite, Heinze's White, Grace Wilder and Portia and sold the blooms direct to the retail stores.

His plant steadily increasing, on October 1, 1902, he opened a commission house at 128 East Third street, to provide an outlet for his cut. The combined stock, furnished by many consignors adding their cuts to his, makes him at present the largest distributor of cut carnations in the Cincinnati market.

Mr. Murphy has just been elected president of the Cincinnati Florists' Society for the third term, having also served as secretary of the same society. He is a charter member of the Society of American Florists and a member of the American Carnation Society. Besides the work devolving on him through the care of his plant, commission house and a couple of farms, he finds time to discharge the duties of director and appraiser of a building association, treasurer of a school district, treasurer of a pike company, and clerk of an election board. Mr. Murphy's home is prettily located near his greenhouses and his interesting family consists of a wife and five children.

FERTILIZER MIXTURES.

In view of the growing interest in the mixing of fertilizers and the encouragement which the practice has received from the work of the experiment stations, attention should be called to the fact that the indiscriminate mixing of fertilizing materials is not a safe practice, says a bulletin of the United States Department of Agriculture. This is due mainly to two facts: (1) When certain materials are mixed chemical changes take place which result in the loss of a valuable constituent, as when lime is mixed with guano nitrogen escapes, or in a change of a constituent to a less available form, as when lime is mixed with superphosphates the phosphoric acid is made less soluble, and (2) mixtures of certain materials as, for example, potash salts and Thomas slag, are likely to harden or "cake" and thus become difficult to distribute if kept some time after mixing.

A German investigator has suggested a diagram, which indicates for a few of the more common fertilizing materials the combinations which may be safely made. In this diagram the dark lines unite materials which should never be mixed, the double lines those which should be applied immediately after mixing and the single lines those which may be mixed at any time.

POINSETTIAS.

Are poinsettias better planted on the bench or grown in pots? If the former, kindly give directions as to depth of soil, distance to plant, etc. J. P. K.

This will entirely depend on what your demand is. If you want to sell the plants, then you must grow them entirely in pots, as they are the worst possible plants to try and lift and pot. If you grow them for cutting, then by all means plant them on the bench. They are easier to manage in every way if planted out on a bench on five inches of good, strong soil. See that the bench will let water pass freely away. Do not plant too early, or your poinsettias will grow to a great height. Choose a bench that gets the full sun and where there is five or six feet of head room.

Take young plants from 2½-inch or 3-inch pots and plant about the middle of August in five inches of well firmed soil, about ten to twelve inches apart each way. They will need some support as they grow. Syringe to keep down mealy bug, which is often troublesome in the true flower, and fumigate frequently. Planted out, the poinsettia has much more root room than in pots and will not lose its foliage. With the roots not starved they will do with a lower temperature, but 55 degrees at night is the lowest they should be allowed to get. W. S.

INCARVILLEA OLGAE.

The plant figured in the last issue of the Review as Incarvillea Olgæ is incorrectly labeled at the greenhouses at Garfield park, Chicago, where it came to Head-gardener John Sell as a gift from a gardener friend. W. N. Craig says it is instead undoubtedly some variety of acanthus.

CARNATIONS

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Filling the Benches.

On account of the hard labor, coming, as it does, at the hottest period of the year, the job of filling the carnation benches with fresh soil is quite often left to indifferent help, or perhaps to extra hands who are taken on to facilitate the work. It is admitted to be a tedious operation and it is quite proper to use all means to prevent the job being long drawn out but there should be some one familiar with the work to oversee and attend to small details.

Some may hold the opinion that soil can be dumped on a bench haphazard and leveled "any old way" or time. So it can, but it makes harder work to do a satisfactory job than if raked around and leveled as it comes in, and even then, while it apparently looks all right, after the bench is planted and has received a month or so watering, hollow places develop, caused by the soil not being of the same density throughout.

It is advisable, too, that benches be filled a week or two in advance. This makes it possible to remedy any defects that may appear and also allows a crop of weeds to be gotten rid of. It is preferable to let the weeds get two or three inches high before removing them, thus improving the mechanical condition of the soil. As soon as a bench is leveled give a fair watering to assist in the germination of weed seeds.

Every grower must arrange his help and make plans according to location of benches, walks, etc., but should have a system and personally see that it is carried out. If wheelbarrows are used provide runs of plank and avoid in every way possible traveling over the soil, either by walking or wheeling. Watch the corners and edges, that there be no skimping of material in these places.

Opinions differ on the question of using manure in the bottom of the bench, but as we see equally good stock grown under both methods and, alas, equally poor, it is evident that no arbitrary rule can be made. More depends on the man than the method and whether or not top dressing and feeding are to be practiced.

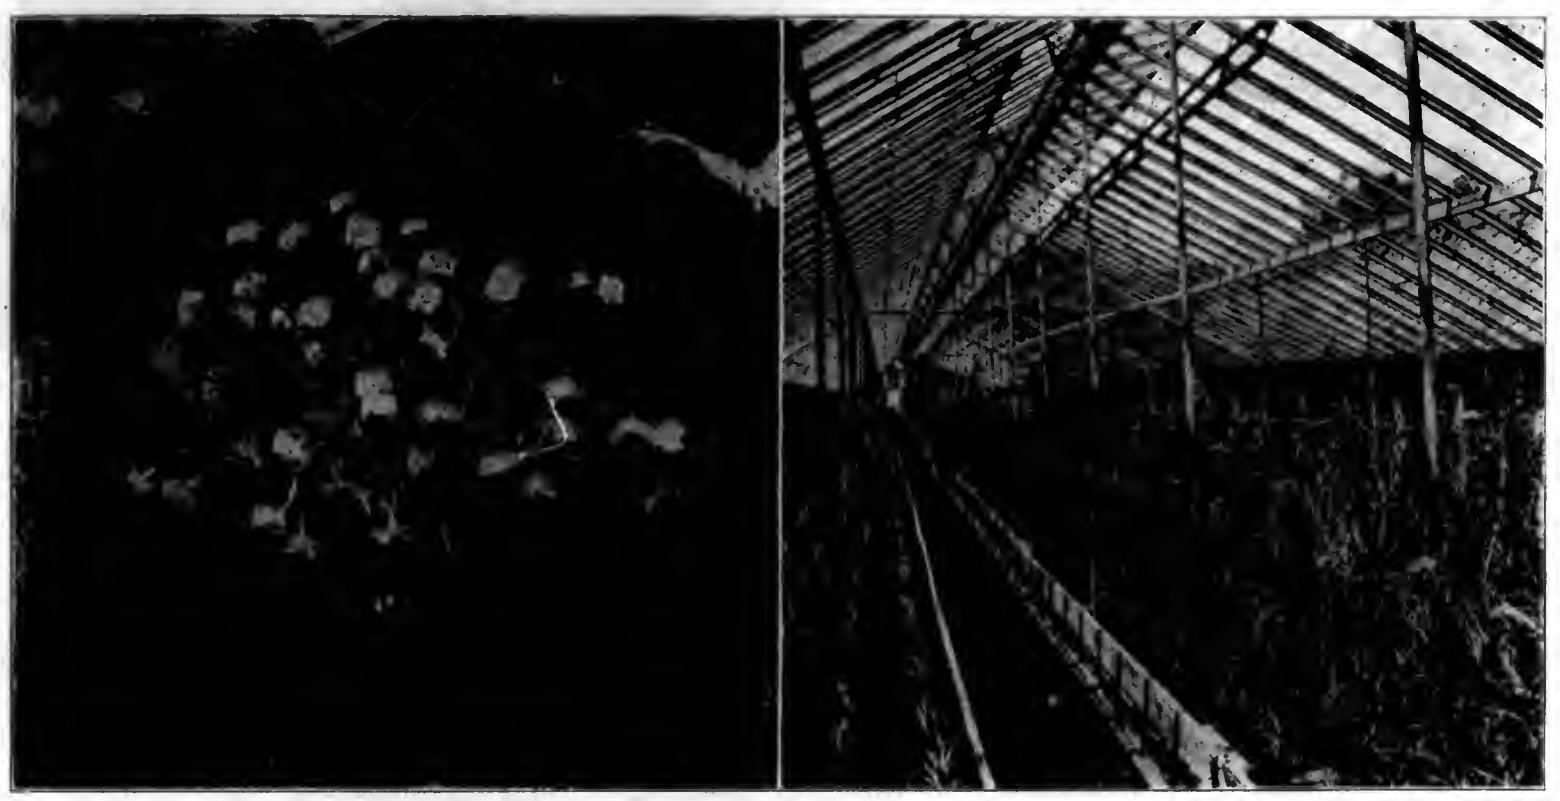
From experience the writer favors the use of manure if a good quality can be obtained. The best bench of Mrs. Bradt ever grown on our place had two inches of half rotted horse manure under six inches of rather heavy loam, a liberal sprinkling of bone meal being put over the manure. The fact of its being a solid bench underlaid with broken brick may have been a factor but it would seem, from the location of the roots when the plants were pulled out, that they found what they wanted at the right time.

Remember the plants when first set out are incapable of using much in the way of food, so I would advise leaving out bone meal until later; however, if the benches are deep no harm will result in putting it near the bottom.

Plants in the field, if to be housed early, should be topped very little if at all at this time. Time is needed for the shoots to mature somewhat before being lifted. Geo. S. Osborn.

TWO NEW ONES.

Among the new carnations to be introduced next year will be Glendale and Helen Goddard, both pictured in this issue. Glendale is a fine variegated sort raised by W. J. & M. S. Vesey and to be distributed jointly with the Chicago Carnation Co. It is a robust grower and seems a particularly fine summer sort, for the pictures reproduced were taken only a few days ago.



Helen Goddard is the result of a cross between Lawson and Crane. The raiser is S. J. Goddard, Framingham, Mass. The habit of the plant is about intermediate between the two parents. The flowers are of a rosy pink color somewhat lighter than Lawson and without any of the objectionable coloring peculiar to that variety. The stems are long and strong and burst calyxes are unknown. Helen Goddard has won an increasing number of admirers each time it has been shown in Boston.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

The American Carnation Society has issued the preliminary premium list for the exhibition to be held at Boston January 24 and 25, 1906. The general classes are identical with those of recent years, calling for 100, fifty and twenty-five blooms in the nine color divisions.

The Lawson medals and the S. A. F. medals are offered under conditions similar to those governing last year. Premiums of $50, $30 and $20 are offered for the best displays of commercial varieties, that is, varieties disseminated prior to April 1, 1905, fifty blooms to a vase and not more than twenty varieties to be shown. A. H. Hews & Co. offer a silver cup for the best display, four varieties, twenty-five blooms of each. Other special premiums will be offered in the regular list, which will be issued in November.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

President Vaughan has made the following appointments: Exhibition judges, John T. Temple, Davenport, Iowa, chairman; Dr. A. S. Halstead, Belleville, Ill.; Joseph A. Manda, South Orange, N. J. Committee on prize essays: Benjamin Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y., chairman; Alex. Wallace, New York; Robert Craig, Philadelphia; sergeant-at-arms, J. D. Carmody, Evansville, Ind. WM. J. STEWART, Sec'y.

An Invitation.

The Secretary of Agriculture desires to extend the courtesies of the Department to the members of the Society of American Florists. The officers of the various bureaus of the Department will be glad to give information along their respective lines of work.

The Bureau of Plant Industry is conducting many lines of investigation which may be of interest to florists. A cordial invitation is extended to members of the society and their friends to visit the greenhouses and conservatories during the convention, to inspect the work on the improvement of plants by breeding and selection, and the work of studying plant diseases, especialy diseases of plants under glass. The trial grounds and testing gardens of the Bureau of Plant Industry will also be open for inspection at all times.

Special points of interest which the members may be desirous of noting are the testing plots on the Department grounds proper, the testing grounds on the flats located a mile south of the department buildings, and the Arlington farms, where various horticultural lines of work are under way. This farm is located near Arlington cemetery and is reached by trolley in about twenty minutes. The various laboratories will be open for inspection at all times and officers of the Bureau of Plant Industry will be delegated especially to show visitors the various lines of work under way.

For information of the visitors a fine collection of gladioli and other bulbous plants has been made and they may be seen growing at the department grounds.

J. R. FREEMAN, Vice Pres.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The annual report of the appointment clerk, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, shows that the total number of persons constituting the body of the Department of Agriculture on July 1, 1904, was 4,504, an increase of 2,160 since July 1, 1897. In addition, there are nearly a quarter of a million special correspondents and reporters, who although receiving no financial remuneration from the Department, coöperate with it and render it much valuable service.

Since the Bureau of Plant Industry was organized, three years ago, the demand for more work has been so great as to require an increase of nearly fifty per cent in men and funds to conduct it. There are now about 500 workers, sixty per cent of whom are engaged in scientific investigation and its application to the farm, the orchard and the garden. The Bureau is endeavoring to train young men as rapidly as possible for this work. The agricultural colleges furnish a part of these men, but the demand for those with proper qualifications is still greater than the supply.

PROTECTING TANKS.

I am putting up a tank inside an unheated shed and would like to know how I am to keep it from freezing? B.

Nearly everybody who thinks of putting up an outside tank, wants to know how it is going to be protected from the cold. This is a natural question to ask, as the problem is of great importance and there are only a few who have it solved for them correctly.

Our long experience in this line of work and the careful attention we have given to this particular subject, thoroughly qualify us to protect any tank from freezing, even in the very coldest climate and where the tank stands for days and weeks without the water being stirred up. The tank itself we provide with a roof which is shingled over so as to thoroughly close up all joints, and inside of this we put a ceiling across the top of the tank, which is made of flooring boards, and tack down two or three thicknesses of heavy tarred paper over same. This makes a dead-air space over the tank. We construct one underneath the tank on the same principle.

Then the pipes, which are the greatest source of danger, are boxed in with two or three or four boxes, according to the climate, and the joints of these are sealed up with tarred paper, as above mentioned, and then we also use a special heavy felt and asbestos covering around the pipe or pipes; that is, put on with a canvas jacket and all then given a hot tar coating. Even then it is necessary to have the work done by thoroughly experienced and skilled mechanics, who will do a first-class, workmanlike job. W. E. CALDWELL CO.

MULCHING.

Plants intended to produce exhibition flowers, and which were planted in May, are now at a point where feeding may be commenced, for they are showing by their pale color and smaller foliage that it will be beneficial. I find that in from eight to ten weeks after planting the bed is full of roots and a light mulch of half-decayed cow manure is a great help in maintaining a more uniform degree of moisture in the soil, as well as affording good nourishment for the plants.

Before putting on the mulch, apply a sprinkling of fine bone to the soil and ruffle the surface over with the fingers, being careful not to dig up the soil so deep as to break off any roots in the operation. Clean off any suckers that may be showing around the plants. This is best done by pulling them out rather than by using a knife, because the roots should be disturbed as little as possible.

I said use half-decayed cow manure, because it is entirely wrong to use it too fresh, as it will then do more harm than good, in consequence of the ammonia rising and burning the lower leaves. On the other hand, if it is absolutely decayed there is not much virtue left in it and, while it will serve a useful purpose in protecting the roots from the burning sun, it will not afford much nourishment to the plants.

If cow manure is not available, sheep or horse manure may be used, but more care must be exercised because they are much more caustic in their action and are apt to burn the roots. Whatever is used must be broken up very fine, so that it will lay close and be easily assimilated by the plants. One grower of my acquaintance mixed the fine siftings of peat with manure for a mulch last year and it worked excellently. Leaf soil is also a first-class medium for the same purpose if one has it or can readily procure it.

Liquid.

Liquid fertilizers are easily applied and cover a wide range and in their proper use is where the skill and care of the operator counts for more than anything, particularly in the use of chemicals. Of the chemicals the ones most generally used are nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia, though potash in the form of muriates, nitrates and sulphates, is used more or less.

We will take up this feeding question more in detail in a few weeks, but for the present with a mulch as recommended our plants will do well enough and only an occasional very light dose of any chemical should be given. One ounce to four gallons of water is plenty strong enough to begin with and it should always be borne in mind that lighter and more frequent feeding is very much to be preferred to heavier doses, which rot the roots and do far more harm than good.

Watering.

Watering during the intense heat we have been experiencing of late is quite a proposition, particularly with pot stock, which has called for water several times a day. As the plants in the benches grow taller and branch out, they shade the center of the bench considerably and it is well to remember this in watering, because the sides and ends of the bench, which are exposed directly to the sun and air, need considerably more water than the shaded portion and to water all alike is to invite leaf spot in the middle rows of plants, from which it will soon spread to all the rest.

Frequent and copious spraying is necessary in order to keep the temperature down to a reasonable point and if this is not done the plants suffer very much under torrid conditions as we have been experiencing of late.

Charles H. Totty.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

The following special prizes are offered, to be competed for at the next annual exhibition of the C. S. A., to be held in Philadelphia, November, 1905:

Vaughan's seed store offers a silver cup, value $25, for the best specimen of bush chrysanthemum plant, grown by a private gardener, which has not received any other award.

H. W. Buckbee offers the H. W. Buckbee trophy, a silver cup, value $25, for the best ten chrysanthemums, one variety, open only to American and foreign introductions of 1905 and varieties not yet in commerce.

VIOLET GROWING.

By B. T. Galloway.

Improvement of Stock.

For one who intends to make violet growing a business it is absolutely essential that early attention should be given to the improvement of the stock. No matter how good the stock may be when purchased it is not so good as that which the grower himself may develop. In fact, the best growers never sell their most desirable stock; hence, the beginner must always put up with second or third rate plants, unless he can make some special arrangement otherwise.

The average number of blooms from commercially grown violets is about fifty per plant. There are many plants that will produce in a season 100, or even as high as 125 or 150. Just as soon as the grower has his house filled with plants the first season, he should make plans for careful selection of his next year's stock. The most vigorous and best-growing plants should be marked, and a record should be kept of the number of flowers picked from these plants. By continuing this practice and propagating only from the plants yielding the greatest number of flowers, in four or five years the flowering capacity of the plants may be largely increased. Not only may the number of flowers per plant be increased, but the size of the flowers, length of stem, and odor may be greatly improved.

Money Value of Selected Stock.

These may appear to be small matters, but they are really vital ones having to do with the success of this sort of business. If 2,000 plants yield an average of fifty flowers per plant, it will give in the course of the season 100,000 flowers. The average can be increased to 100 per plant in five years by judicious selection, and it will cost no more to grow stock that will yield 100 per plant than it does to grow those with fifty. The only extra cost is in the matter or picking and bunching. Soil, fertilizer, heat, and labor are otherwise all practically the same. The time required to mark the violets as picked is insignificant as it is done when the grower is going over his plants anyway and by having a label tied to the plant nothing is required except to put down the actual number picked and the date.

House of Sweet Peas and Violets as Grown by William Sim, Cliftondale, Mass.

Not only may the number and size of the flowers be increased and the length of stem improved, but the time when most of the flowers are developed can be changed. Normally the heaviest pickings of the violet occur during November, March and April. During these months prices, of course, are always lowest. For the most profit the heaviest pickings should be in December, January and February. It will be found in marking the plants and dates that certain plants will give a large number of flowers in December and January and a comparatively smaller number during March and April. Continuous propagation from such plants will eventually have a tendency to change the flowering habit, which would be of marked advantage to the grower. Other things being equal, if the season for the greatest number of flowers could be changed to the scarce months, it would just about double the profits. This is certainly an item worth working for.

Cost and Profits.

In conclusion, a few words in reference to the cost and profits in the growing of this crop may not be out of place. Of course, any statements on these subjects must necessarily be general. All things considered, however, it may be said that violets can be grown at a total average cost of about 10 cents per plant. This seems the most satisfactory way of expressing it. Ten cents per plant will cover all items, such as fair interest on investment, fuel, labor, soil, fertilizers and all incidentals. As already stated, the average yield of a violet plant is about fifty flowers, but it should be double this. On the basis of fifty flowers, however, the average price for the season should not be less than 75 cents per hundred, or 37½ cents per plant. At an average price of 60 cents per hundred, which is a low average, the production per plant would be 30 cents, or a net profit of 20 cents per plant.

Ordinarily, taking it from season to season, the low average wholesale prices of violets will run about as follows:

October	$ .50	per hundred
November	.50	" "
December	1.00	" "
January	.75	" "
February	.50	" "
March	.50	" "
April	.50	" "
Average	.60	" "

With proper management, however, and the growing of good flowers the wholesale prices should run as follows:

October	$ .50	per hundred
November	.75	" "
December	1.50	" "
January	2.00	" "
February	.75	" "
March	.50	" "
April	.50	" "
Average	.90	" "

It is not necessary to comment further on these figures, as they speak for themselves. Retail prices will be about double those mentioned above.

We have emphasized all along the absolute necessity for strict attention to business methods. The more I come in contact with workers in these fields and the more I study results, the more convinced I become that success is not always dependent on knowledge or ability to grow stock, but it is largely dependent on good business management. It is not the big things that make the difference between success and failure, but it is the cumulative effect of the little things. The field is one which any good man can develop and make profitable if he goes about it in the right way.

TROUBLE WITH ANTS.

I have been bothered with black ants getting into flower beds where there are coleus, geraniums, cannas, etc. Can you tell me what I can do to get rid of them without hurting the plants?

R. A. P.

These little creatures appear to be very troublesome. Several things will destroy them, but will also kill the grass or any vegetation where the ants are working.

Edward Snow, of Sayre, Pa., writes me as follows: "To destroy ants use tar water applied with a sprayer. You will find it will be effectual in getting rid of your ants. Use genuine pine tar or a solution of it. If you cannot get pine tar you can use oil of tar in solution. Be careful not to make it too strong should you use the oil. Do not use gas tar under any circumstances." Mr. Snow adds: "If I have not made my idea plain, just write me and I will cheerfully respond." Now I am sure if Mr. Snow would send the REVIEW the exact formula for using the tar, method of applying, etc., it would be a great service, not only to the above inquirer, but to hundreds of others. Mr. Snow, please do so, and oblige

SWEET PEAS WITH VIOLETS.

The sweet peas shown in the accompanying illustration were planted the first week in November, 1904, in rows along the line of supports among the violet plants, which are to be seen at the base of the vines in the picture. The violets had been planted since the beginning of October. They were grown along at 42 degrees until the middle of March, when the temperature was increased to 50 degrees. The photograph was taken the first week in April. The varieties are Earliest of All, Mont Blanc and Earliest Sunbeams. Wm. Sim.

WILLIAM SIM'S PLACE.

The establishment of William Sim, of Cliftondale, Mass., is now so well known as to need little introduction to readers of the Review. Mr. Sim, is an unassuming Scotchman, hailing from the canny city of Aberdeen. He has been at his present stand about six years and has certainly accomplished wonders in that time. In addition to his fine block of greenhouses, models of what commercial structures should be, he owns some twenty-five acres of good land, all of which he cultivates as few owners would do.

Specialties at Cliftondale are chrysanthemums, violets, sweet peas, candytuft and tomatoes. Mr. Sim was probably the first prominent grower who grew his violets in big, light houses from 300 to 360 feet long, and it is safe to say that the quality of his flowers has never been surpassed. So also with sweet peas. He set a pace that made others stand aghast. Awards of first-class cultural certificates from the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and wholesale flower market shows attest the quality of his flowers, as also does the added fact that he has never yet had enough of them to supply the demand.

Candytuft is largely grown for Memorial day trade, while tomatoes are used to follow violets and sweet peas. A feature at Cliftondale which must be noted by all visitors, is the extreme neatness prevailing at every season. No weeds are seen indoors and very few outside, the place being as well kept as any private estate.

Mr. and Mrs. Sim and two members of the next generation, wide-awake boys, who, we hope, will prove worthy helpers to their father in a few years, are seen in the domestic picture, taken on a portion of the well kept lawn.

WASHINGTON IN SUMMER.

As a summer resort Washington has not, it is true, been generally exploited. To the average American such a recommendation would be regarded merely as evidence of midsummer madness. Awful tales have been told of the height to which the temperature mounts in July and August and marvelous descriptions have been written of summer days in the national capital. One well-known author, for example, declared in print not long ago that during the hot months none but the business man ventured out during the day, and that asphalt ran in our gutters like cold molasses. Now, it is hot, and the paving does get soft, but it is not quite tropical and the asphalt has never been known to run off of even our steepest hills. It is largely a matter of the traditional bad name. Washington has been pronounced unlivable in summer, and, therefore, by the outsider and even by many of its indwellers it is regarded as a place to be avoided from June to October, or to be endured with scant grace if need be.

Compared with the little country towns as commonly patronized by cityites, it is safe to say that Washington is no hotter and far more attractive, and it would be well to note that when New York or Boston, with the thermometer in the upper 90s is accountable for ten or twelve deaths and twice as many heat prostrations, Washington, with a temperature of 95 or 98 degrees, counts neither loss nor disaster. This is partly due to the construction of the city and the ample provision of shade. Washington was built to suit its climate; its streets are wide, its parks plentiful. As yet we have no canyons formed by skyscraping buildings and few cluttered tenements in the heart of the city.

The rich man can make himself moderately comfortable anywhere, but the poor man must accommodate himself to circumstances and it is, therefore, pleasant to note that Washington's chief attractions are of a kind free to all. Washington is beautiful at all seasons of the year, but never more so than in her midsummer garments. Her long rows of shade trees, which on some of the narrower thoroughfares form a complete arch; her vine-clad houses and her orderly parks are all prospects pleasing to the eye and possessions unrivaled by another city. Standing on the Capitol balcony or on any other local eminence and looking down upon the city, it seems at this time of the year like a village set in a forest; here and there the house-tops and church spires appearing above the masses of foliage. Washington, too, is fortunate in her backgrounds. Looking upon the city as a unit and glancing in any direction, the picture presented is one of peculiar charm. No factory walls break the horizon which the rolling hills mark with pleasing clearness. Its surroundings are as fair as itself and, while inviting growth, assume an air of perfect completion.

The accessibility of the suburbs is one of Washington's peculiar attractions. A twenty-minute trolley ride from the heart of the city will land the business man in the midst of untrammeled country and on the way he will not have passed through an unsightly neighborhood or experienced any unsavory odors. That Washington's poor are not confined to any special quarter, but scattered through all neighborhoods, has sometimes been regretted, but in the end it tends to the betterment of both the classes and the town. Instead of dwindling into tonement districts and trailing off into dilapidated settlements, Washington grows braver toward its outskirts and finally, without a break, loses its urban aspect in surburban meadows. The country, the real country, natural and unspoiled by man, creeps up to Washington's back door and beckons alluringly to the nature lover. Parks are well enough in their way, a true beneficence to many, but they cannot compete with the fields and groves unordered and unclaimed.

There is great variety in the country around Washington and the possibility of reaching it with minimum expenditure of time and effort makes its exploration open to all. Passing from the Longnborough road through Tenleytown to Chevy Chase and from thence to Rock Creek park to Fourteenth street, one will have observed in panorama almost every variety of landscape, from the extended view to the closed vista, from the rolling pasture to the sun-bedabbled wood.

It is possible for a person of moderate strength to walk over most of this territory and for the camera huntsman or the artist no more fruitful territory could be found. Since bicycling and the bathing beach are as well known by the general public as by the small boy, one needs no exploitation, but there are certain urban pleasures which may well be remarked.

The Library of Congress offers for summer days and evenings an agreeable retreat. In its architectural lines and superb decorations it is a delight to the eye and in its splendid collections of books and pictures it affords an almost inexhaustible supply of intellectual refreshment. To merely wander through its halls, gazing by day at its masterly mural paintings and through its windows at its imposing vistas, or at night realizing the charm of its glittering illuminations, is sufficient amusement for any idle, spiritless day, but should the visitor be so inclined he will find the vast resources of the reading room freely placed at his disposal and the treasures of the print division equally within his reach. In the latter he will find not only art books, periodicals and pictures, but also stereoscopes and 40,000 photographic views with descriptions, by means of which, in the pleasant environments, he can become familiar with many foreign scenes and travel gratuitously through almost every known country. This is, perhaps, not the most interesting way of traveling, but without doubt it has its advantages.

For the music lover there are the band concerts, given at regular intervals in the public parks, and for the art student fairly representative exhibitions of paintings are to be found in the dealers' art galleries. The public library also hospitably opens its doors to the summer sojourner and for the botanist the Botanical Gardens are not without potent interest. There is tennis and croquet, horseback riding and driving, golf and automobile and what more, for poor and rich alike, can any summer resort offer than these? F. H. K.

BROWN SCALE.

Enclosed by this mail is a box containing leaves which are covered with a brown bug. What will destroy them? Also the small brown scale which appears on palm leaves and other plants? C. G.

The insects on the leaves sent are the common brown scale, although there are many species of these creatures looking much alike. Syringe with kerosene emulsion. With the palms, if large and valuable, it would be best to syringe them with the emulsion. For these scale insects many are now using the hydrocyanic acid gas, the formula of which has often appeared in the pages of this paper, and I am glad to notice that the advocates of its use are much more numerous than they were. PARCELS POST.

At the recent meeting of the American Association of Nurserymen a committee consisting of C. L. Watrous, Des Moines, Ia.; H. P. Kelsey, Boston, and J. C. Hale, Winchester, Tenn., was appointed to secure the co-operation of the Society of American Florists and the American Seed Trade Association in an endeavor to secure a parcels post law. The S. A. F. will doubtless hear from the committee at the Washington convention. Numerous postal reforms are being agitated and a rational proposition will receive wide endorsement, at the same time encountering the opposition of powerful interests. But postal reform is bound to come.

HEAVY HAIL.

In May we had a very severe hail storm which did a great deal of damage in the neighborhood of Tiffin, Ohio. A photograph taken of a lot of hailstones an hour after they had fallen, with a yardstick lying beside them, gives an idea of their size. We had some hailstones that measured two and one-half inches in diameter and seven inches in circumference. They were flat with a jagged edge, very much resembling a cogwheel. This was the severest hailstorm ever known in this region, and of course I had to have a piece of it. If the hail had continued thirty seconds longer, as they fell when the storm ceased, it would have broken every pane of glass I had on the place.

There was no wind, the hail came straight down and every one of the big fellows went right through. We have rubber felt roofing on our workshop, and wherever the big hailstones struck, it broke the felt so that the roof has leaked very badly ever since.

No, thank you, I don't care for any more of this kind; once is enough for me. Most of my glass was insured and the loss was very promptly adjusted by Mr. Esler and in a few days I received a check in payment for loss from the treasurer of the Florists' Hail Association.

I had only part of my glass insured. I was negligent and did not notify the association of houses recently built and failed to take out more insurance, therefore I got only a prorata payment on what was broken. I would advise all florists to insure, for they have no guarantee when they will have to take their dose of hail. I assure you it is quite a comfortable feeling to know that when the hail is knocking daylight out of your glass that you have an antidote in the Hail Association for the dose of hail you are taking. LEWIS ULLRICH.

THE RICHMOND ROSE.

It must be a pleasure to the E. G. Hill Co. to hear from so many sources that the young stock of the Richmond rose is doing so well with everyone. The growers north of Chicago, who bought the new red rose so heavily, all have fine stock of it, the plants having made remarkably good growth, and the same report comes from the United States Cut Flower Co., of Elmira, N. Y., and many other growers in the east.

THE BLACK ROSE.

The following information, gleaned from our esteemed contemporary, the New Orleans Democrat, might well be published under Horace Greeley's heading, "Interesting if True."

Fred W. Bacho, a young practicing attorney of this city, who claims to have discovered the secret of growing a black rose, and for which the North American Nursery Association has a standing reward of $10,000 to the person discovering the secret, will leave Mobile for Detroit, Mich., on July 22, to arrange for demonstrations of growing the black rose the coming fall. There will be two competitors besides Mr. Bacho for the reward. One is J. Lapsley, of London, England, and the other a Savannah, Ga., man.

Lapsley has named his rose the "Rose of Sorrow," while Bacho has selected the name of "Good Friday Rose" for his flower. In referring to his discovery Mr. Bacho stated today that he has demonstrated beyond doubt that he has discovered the secret of growing the flower and is confident that he will win the prize money offered by the nursery association. "I am willing to wager a thousand dollars that I win the prize," said he, by way of emphasizing his claim of possessing the secret. To conduct the demonstrations he has purchased an acre of land in Jackson county, Mich., 100 miles from Detroit. The soil is said to be ideal for the purpose for which it is intended. At the demonstrations will be several northern men who have taken an interest in the claims of Mr. Bacho and who have agreed to give him all necessary financial backing if the demonstrations prove successful.

Mr. Bacho has made a number of private demonstrations in this city, and claims that he has solved the problem, not by chemically treating the bush or flower, as some have done, but by treating the soil with chemicals. He claims that his black rose will live longer after plucked than the ordinary rose, and that he finds that life is prolonged by plucking a small piece of the stem off every few hours and submerging in salt water.

It must be a pleasure to the E. G. Hill Co. to hear from so many sources that the young stock of the Richmond rose is doing so well with everyone. The growers north of Chicago, who bought the new red rose so heavily, all have fine stock of it, the plants having made remarkably good growth, and the same report comes from the United States Cut Flower Co., of Elmira, N. Y., and many other growers in the east.

THE BLACK ROSE.

The following information, gleaned from our esteemed contemporary, the New Orleans Democrat, might well be published under Horace Greeley's heading, "Interesting if True."

Fred W. Bacho, a young practicing attorney of this city, who claims to have discovered the secret of growing a black rose, and for which the North American Nursery Association has a standing reward of $10,000 to the person discovering the secret, will leave Mobile for Detroit, Mich., on July 22, to arrange for demonstrations of growing the black rose the coming fall. There will be two competitors besides Mr. Bacho for the reward. One is J. Lapsley, of London, England, and the other a Savannah, Ga., man.

Lapsley has named his rose the "Rose of Sorrow," while Bacho has selected the name of "Good Friday Rose" for his flower. In referring to his discovery Mr. Bacho stated today that he has demonstrated beyond doubt that he has discovered the secret of growing the flower and is confident that he will win the prize money offered by the nursery association. "I am willing to wager a thousand dollars that I win the prize," said he, by way of emphasizing his claim of possessing the secret. To conduct the demonstrations he has purchased an acre of land in Jackson county, Mich., 100 miles from Detroit. The soil is said to be ideal for the purpose for which it is intended. At the demonstrations will be several northern men who have taken an interest in the claims of Mr. Bacho and who have agreed to give him all necessary financial backing if the demonstrations prove successful.

Mr. Bacho has made a number of private demonstrations in this city, and claims that he has solved the problem, not by chemically treating the bush or flower, as some have done, but by treating the soil with chemicals. He claims that his black rose will live longer after plucked than the ordinary rose, and that he finds that life is prolonged by plucking a small piece of the stem off every few hours and submerging in salt water.

STORIES I HAVE HEARD.

I HEARD a story once of a "florist" who was "the real thing" and who could count on the fingers of one hand the other "real florists" in a certain large city. When this party was "under the influence," which did not average more than ten hours out of the twenty-four, he would develop an overpowering indignation at the way "the profession" had "gone to the dogs." "There's Smith," he would bawl, "he's no florist, he's a boiler-maker; there's Jones, he's nothing but a carpenter; and Brown, the president of your club, he's only a cowboy," etc., down through the list. I was reminded of this story on reading some excellent cultural teachings written by a gentleman who was once cashier in a hotel bar. The ranks of the trade have certainly been recruited from every walk in life.

I HEARD a story once of an "Ideal Employer" whose tart response to the excuses of the foreman for the error of an employee who had been ill but kept at work, was: "This place is no hospital!" and when later the foreman protested against having given him as an assistant a man who was a good grower but notoriously unreliable, replied: "Well, the man's got to live!" The foreman pondered some time on this "consistency" and later resigned.

I HEARD a story once of a florist who must have had some instruction from the Priests of High Finance. He had an establishment in a town located on a body of water that divided two states. His financiering had been so "high" that finally a writ of execution was issued late one day and the next morning an officer started out to the place to levy on the greenhouses and contents (the land not being owned by the financier). All the officer found to levy on was the hole where the boilers had been. Everything else had been loaded on to flat boats during the night and removed to the adjoining state.

I HEARD a story once of two men, one a florist and the other a fruit dealer. They rented a store together, each taking one side. They soon agreed to disagree and as the fruit dealer succeeded in getting a lease for the whole store from the owner, the florist had to move. The fruit dealer didn't need the additional space in his business so he put in a stock of cut flowers and retained the old appearance of the store as nearly as possible. The next day a customer ordered a large standing shield of carnations and roses with certain lettering on same. The fruit dealer was an observing fellow and had seen many designs put together during the joint occupancy of the store. He had a boy that knew how to stem carnations. He laid the wire frame on the counter, mossed it and proceeded to business. It was not bad for a first attempt, so he shook hands with himself and told the boy to stand it up so he could better observe the effect. The boy did so, but all the effect the fruit dealer got was a wire frame to which clung shreds of tin foil and moss. The flowers were on the floor. He had neglected to tie in the moss.

I HEARD a story once of a store florist who was "very lucky" in "games of skill." Poker was his best "holt." He looked after the "little things" in his business, and after paying his clerks he would let them "sit in" to a "little game" in the back room. As a result the bulk of their wages would find its way back into the till and they would thus be kept from squandering their coin in undesirable ways. But, alas, there came a time when the game went against the employer, whereat he arose in great wrath, threw the cards and chips into the stove and virtually vowed that there would be no more gambling in his place.

I HEARD a story once of a man who dealt in bulbs. A syndicate had been formed to control the entire output of a certain kind of bulb much used by florists. The syndicate contracted with all the important growers and fixed certain selling prices to the trade. In the face of these conditions the man mentioned took orders for large quantities of these bulbs at reductions from the syndicate's rates. He evidently figured that if he had a goodly share of the orders the syndicate would have to come to him and accept his terms. The season for delivery arrived and grew stale while the syndicate waited for the man to be good and maintained its schedule. The man continued to wait for the syndicate to "bust." But it didn't. It finally shipped all its surplus to other countries and the hero of this tale was left to explain to his customers why he failed to deliver the goods. BILLY.

Establishment of Max Herzog, St. Louis, to be Demolished.

THE HERZOG PLACE.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of the Max Herzog place, one of the best known establishments in the vicinity of St. Louis. The real estate was recently sold to the Frisco railroad and William Meyer, of Kirkwood, has bought all that stands on the land. He will tear down the house, after removing the contents, and re-erect them at his own place in Kirkwood. Mr. Herzog will take a long vacation before deciding on his future, but will keep an eye open for a good opportunity to re-engage in the business.

MODERATION DESIRABLE.

In view of the proclivity of many cut flower and plant shippers to file claims, sometimes exorbitant, against express companies when responsiblity for loss cannot be clearly shown, the suggestion of E. Albertson, president of the American Association of Nurserymen and last year chairman of its transportation committee, may be of interest. The nurserymen have been having their own troubles because the railroads have been changing the classification of nursery stock in such a way as to effect an increase in freights. Here is what Mr. Albertson says:

"We would also advise that shippers should be more conservative in filing their claims against the railroads, filing claims only where serious losses caused by incompetency or grave neglect have occurred, and then only for actual loss at wholesale prices. The fact that so many and exorbitant claims have been and are being filed is largely the cause for unfavorable changes in the classifications, and is one of the hardest points to overcome in trying to secure concessions.

"You know how it is when some customer comes in with a big claim that you know to be unreasonable, and you feel that you are being held up. In future dealings with such parties you are not inclined to make many concessions.

"It is the same with the railroads; the officials are working for the companies employing them and are working for their interests. Yet as a class there are no nicer men or more reasonable than railroad officials. And when shown that there are inequalities in their classifications which are a burden, curtailing business, and that what shippers want is to harmonize these and by certain changes increase their business, working to the mutual advantage of both,—we will have less trouble in having our petitions favorably acted upon.

"A number of the largest eastern shippers have stated to writer that all of the claims they ever collected have not amounted to ten per cent of additional freight they have had to pay under the increase on boxes from third to second class, and that to secure the return to third class they would be large gainers were they to waive all claims. Yet there is little doubt that the filing of so many claims was the cause of the change."

It will be remembered that when the express companies increased the rate on cut flowers, three years ago, it was reported that one cause for the act was the great number of claims filed against them. During the time the increase was in force it is quite probable that the sum realized from it was more than the cut flower shippers had ever collected for losses.

CULTURE of Grafted Roses sent on receipt of 25c.—FLORISTS' REVIEW.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Good flowers are by no means easy to obtain. Considerable hustling is often necessary to secure satisfactory stock for the orders. Carnations are very scarce. Sweet peas are succumbing to the heat. Asters are increasing in numbers, but until Semple's appear the buyers do not enthuse much over them. Roses are the chief standby, with valley, lilies and a very few orchids as aides.

A Piece of Enterprise.

The Floral Exchange is to be congratulated on its success in presenting the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany with a bouquet of their fine Queen of Edgely roses on their wedding day, June 6. The flowers were shipped on Decoration day, on the S. S. Kronprinz, and on their arrival at Bremen were taken at once to Berlin, where our ambassador, the Hon. Charlemagne Tower, presented them to the royal couple, from whom a note of thanks has been received. The gift was a graceful tribute from the president of the Floral Exchange, D. Fuerstenberg, to his one-time sovereign. Owing to the duties placed on plants and flowers by Germany this present was only made possible through the efforts of the German ambassador to this country, Baron Speck von Sternberg.

A Bit of History.

Four passengers were traveling from Baltimore to Washington one day in the spring of 1888.

"What shall we do to make the convention interesting?" one of them asked his companions.

The speaker was Robert Craig. With him were John N. May, Robert J. Halliday and J. G. Whilldin.

"Adopt a standard flower pot," Mr. Whilldin promptly replied.

They all agreed that this was the very thing. All had felt the annoyance of one man's 6-inch being another man's 7-inch and were eager to do away with the evil. The convention at New York that summer recommended a uniform standard of sizes to all manufacturers of flower pots. These sizes were first planned as outside measurements, but were afterward changed to inside measurements. Two years later, at "dear old Boston" in 1890, the Whilldin Pottery Company won the society's certificate of merit for its exhibit of one dozen pots of fourteen different sizes, all that were then made that would most closely conform to the standard in every respect. The competition for this prize was very keen.

There is no question that this action of the S. A. F. in adopting a standard flower pot has been of incalculable benefit to the entire florists' business.

Various Notes.

The Whilldin Pottery Company has added the next door building to their large plant at 715 Wharton street. This will increase their capacity twenty-five per cent. Business with them is excellent.

Lawrence Thompson, of Kennett, has now a thoroughly equipped, modern plant for carnations and mushrooms. He has just received two large Lord & Burnham, or should I say Burnham-Hitchings-Pierson, boilers?

Charles E. Meehan and family are in their cottage at Ocean City.

Philip J. Hauswirth, of Chicago, was in this city last Friday.

H. Bayersdorfer and family are expected back from Europe on Monday.

D. T. Connor is now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary for the triple alliance here.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving some nice tea roses. He reports a good demand for galax leaves and a fine catch of fish on his brief fishing trip at Beach Haven.

Edward Reid is going to the convention.

D. Fuerstenberg is traveling in California.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society held the July meeting last Tuesday. The perennials were a feature.

John Weston is away on his vacation.

J. A. Smith had some good fishing at Anglesea.

Alfred Burton had a delightful house party last week to celebrate the completion of the new range of greenhouses. All employees and a few outsiders enjoyed Mr. Burton's hospitality.

Walter P. Stokes entertained the employees of his firm, Johnson & Stokes, last Saturday. The party went by boat to Riverton, driving from there to Floracroft, the Stokes place, where they dined and had a splendid time.

M. Rice & Co. have a most effective display room for their screens in their first floor gallery. Mr. Rice has just completed his new "katalog."

The Philadelphia Cut Flower Company is busily engaged in altering and house cleaning in anticipation of welcoming their friends in August.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions during the past week were worse than for several years. With maximum temperatures of 90 to 96 degrees in the shade during the whole week, this condition of things is not at all surprising. To quote prices is almost impossible. Sellers were pleased to accept what any one would offer and felt lucky if they cleared out at any price. Large quantities of stock in the market were either unsold or given away and many growers wisely decided not to trouble taking in any flowers during the hot wave. Roses and carnations were each sold as low as 10 cents per hundred and really good sweet peas were begging for a purchaser at 50 cents per thousand.

Conditions this week show a slight improvement; less stock is arriving and very little of it is of good quality. Roses of the better grades are hard to find, while carnations have dwindled in size woefully. Enchantress and Prosperity now come almost white but Fair Maid holds its color well. Prices vary all the way from 15 cents to $1 per hundred, very good stock bringing about 40 cents. Sweet peas, owing to the heat and drought are coming much shorter-stemmed; 10 cents per hundred seems to be the top price. Lily of the valley remains fairly firm. A few asters are appearing. For these and other flowers demand is very light.

Various Notes.

The markets, wholesale houses and retail stores have a holiday appearance these days. Quite a number of employers and employees are away on vacations and business all around is at about its lowest ebb.

Bernard McGinty, salesman at the Park street market for Montrose Greenhouses, has been engaged by N. F. McCarthy & Co. to take charge of their wholesale cut flower department. Mr. McGinty had been planning to go into the commission business on his own account in September.

Wm. Nicholson is busy housing his carnations. Stock outdoors looks well. A large batch for summer blooming was staked up and already coming into flower. He finds Fair Maid gives him better returns than Enchantress.

S. J. Goddard's new seedling carnation, Helen Goddard, looks fine in the field. This variety will be introduced next season and Mr. Goddard already has many orders for it. The Massachusetts Horticultural Society awarded it a first-class certificate last winter and it was shown at Chicago and scored well.

The principal horticultural attraction just now is the coming picnic of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club at Randolph grove on July 25. Electric cars from Boston to Mattapan or Milton going to Brockton pass the grove. As many as possible will arrive at 10 a. m. and sports will start at 10:30. There are twenty-four events in all, the baby show, perhaps wisely, coming last. A cordial invitation is extended to outside friends to join in the picnic, for which there is no charge whatever, and a first-class time is assured.

An exhibition occurs at Horticultural hall on July 22. During August weekly shows will be held.

E. O. Orpet has some nice little seedling odontoglossums which have come through our recent hot wave all right and will, we hope, flower for the raiser in a few years.

An out-of-town grower carried in 2,500 carnations and about the same number of sweet peas to one of the markets on July 13. He says he had 75 cents left after his car fares were paid. Spent half the day trying to sell them and naturally went home a trifle out of sorts. Others have fared about as badly.

Recent rains have greatly helped carnations in the fields. Many growers are already starting to house.

Not much convention talk is heard this hot weather. The impression that Washington is a very warm city will probably deter some from making the trip; still Boston will send a good representation.

W. N. Craig.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Very little can be added, in the way of a market report, to what was said a week ago. We have had the warmest ten days New York has ever experienced in July. But, after all, one might as well take an optimistic view of things. The condition of the market is not particularly unusual. It always seems a little worse each year when the dog-days arrive and the accumulations of unsold flowers pile up in the ash barrels; but it is the same old story every year, and, while the new merchants feel this condition of things keenly, the old stagers look upon it philosophically, and go right on with their work unmurmuringly, knowing that before long the clouds will lift and business boom again.

The asters have arrived. Not the John Jacob Astors of "the 400," but the asters of the 400,000, for that is about the quantity we may anticipate to reach this market weekly. There will be room for all the perfect flowers that come, but imagine the finish of the rank and file, especially the rank! The wholesalers are already gritting their teeth in anticipation of their troubles. Gladioli, also outdoor-grown and undeveloped, are coming in floods. It is a question how all will be disposed of to the satisfaction of everyone concerned. Certainly New York will this summer be headquarters for this flower.

The week opens with a more comfortable condition of things in every respect. The Newport season has begun and the demand from there for good flowers promises to be extensive. Orchids, especially, and American Beauties are in demand. Much of the rose stock arriving now is inferior. Carnations are neither plentiful nor of good quality. Those that are perfect sell well. Now that the wedding season is over valley goes begging. Nobody wants sweet peas. Hollyhocks and dahlias have appeared. Wholesale stores close from noon to dewy eve. Most of them are locked at four o'clock. Redecoration of the stores is in full blast.

Various Notes.

Twenty-eighth street will swarm this winter with wholesale firms new and old. It is too bad that at this centre some Crœsus of horticulture does not build an edifice capable of accommodating everyone in this branch of the trade. There could be no doubt of the wisdom of this centralization and of the general acceptance of the opportunity by every enterprising man in the business. Here, too, in a large enough building, might be located club rooms that would be a credit to the organization. But these are dreams which some of us may not be here to see realized.

An interesting announcement for American floriculture is our world's fair in 1909, which will celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the Hudson river and which it is now claimed will be the greatest international exposition the world has ever seen. It will open in September, 1909, and already committees have been appointed. Magnificent structures will be built with a view to permanency.

The exodus to Europe is not yet over. Last week Fred Atkins, of Rutherford, was a passenger on the Staatendam, making a business trip. Many of those now in Europe expect to be home in time for the convention.

The transportation committee of the New York club is busy at present, making final arrangements for the special train and its conveniences for the enjoyment of its members and visitors at the national convention. Everybody in the vicinity of New York will be welcome and there seems no good reason why four or five cars should not be filled with vacation enthusiasts who are postponing their annual outing so that it may include this delightful opportunity of visiting the capital.

It was not Thomas Sharkey who entertained the stork last week, but John F. Sharkey, of the Thomas Young, Jr., Co. Mr. Sharkey and his increased family will leave early in August for their annual sojourn in the mountains.

Louis Futterman, of Gunther's, is at Rockaway for a couple of weeks. John A. Foley, manager of the N. Lecakes Co., is also spending his leisure with his family at Rockaway.

George Hildebrand, John Young's lieutenant, is at Darien, Conn., for his vacation. Among the others who are resting are James Coyle, of Gormley's; Arthur Hunt, of Langjhar's, and Thomas Miller, of Sheridan's.

An Irish world's fair is announced by the city papers to be held this fall in Madison Square Garden. Exhibits from the "old country" are being arranged for. This show will doubtless come in competition with the fall show of the New York Horticultural Society. The Killarney rose will get a well merited boom at the Irish exhibition.

W. F. Sheridan, John B. Nugent, Jr., and John Young compose the transportation committee of the Florists' Club, and all intending to go to Washington should send the committee word at once, so complete arrangements for the comfort of everybody may be assured.

His many friends sympathize with Arthur Merritt, of Thorley's, in the loss of his eldest son, a young man of 15 years, who died of appendicitis Monday.

Louis Siebrecht, of Floral Park, N. Y., who for thirty-three years has conducted a florists' business there, died on Thursday, after a long illness. He was a relative of Henry and William Siebrecht, of New Rochelle and Astoria.

The Greenhouse Co., the incorporation of which was announced in last week's Review, has lost no time in getting to business. They have taken over the plant of the Phillips Mfg. Co., in Jersey City, and are reported to have already booked a number of contracts. They have $200,000 capital stock and aim to be a large factor in the greenhouse building business. W. R. Phillips is president of the company and many of his associates and employees have much experience in the business.

The retail windows on Broadway and Fifth avenue these days are wonderfully alike. Most of them have a vase of red gladioli. A few have a background of Scottii ferns. Some have only the fern, simple, restful and sufficient.

White roses were very scarce Monday, hardly any in the market. The best Beauties touched $20 per hundred, fine asters $2 and good carnations brought $1 easily. There is no doubt last week's prices were bottom. When things cannot get any further down they must improve.

The reporter who saw 1,000 orchids used last week by one house, in some funeral designs, was looking through his magnifying glass. Half that quantity would be nearer the facts. The designs were wreaths and a huge broken column, the latter quite unique as to the flower used for the design, but not otherwise remarkable, unless the price obtained for it made it so. It was backed with sago leaves and filled with smilax.

H. Herrmann, the supply man, is back from Germany with new designs and immenso stocks for the fall season. He will have an exhibit at the convention.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Several factors have operated to bring about a considerable change in market conditions since last report. The wholesalers are unanimous in saying that trade is excellent for July, some houses even going so far as to state that they have already done as much business, measured by dollars and cents, as in the whole of July last year. At the same time the retailers tell the old story of no summer business except funeral work. It is the shipping demand which is helping the market.

Receipts are now probably at the lowest ebb. There is little really good material coming in and receipts of all qualities have been curtailed by replanting operations, so that everything of usable quality is being cleaned up at prices which average excellent for July.

One or two houses continue to have good cuts of Beauties, but the general supply has shortened in keeping with everything else and prices have stiffened. Medium lengths are especially scarce. Really good Brides and Maids are hard to find but there is a fair cut from young stock, of course not very large or strong, which sells readily at from $2 to $4 per hundred. Bride is particularly in demand and the cut from old plants, what few are left, if clean, sells quickly at good prices. Kaiserin sells on sight. Liberty is not so much in evidence. Chatenay has lost value, as a large part of the receipts are full blown and unusable except for immediate working up in funeral designs.

Nearly all the growers have thrown out carnations preparatory to replanting and receipts are light. White is in especially strong demand and difficult to supply. Outdoor carnations are beginning to make their appearance, but are yet of poor quality. A few asters are coming in and are generally good, considering the recent rains. They are selling up to $2 per hundred.

Sweet peas are making better prices, in keeping with other items, and outdoor flowers are all selling better than they were. Auratum lilies move readily and a few Lilium album and rubrum are useful in funeral work. Candidum is gone. Valley is in fair demand.

There continue to be large receipts of green goods with a slow market. Green galax, new crop, has arrived earlier than usual.

Various Notes.

Sophia Albertina Samuelson, mother of Charles A. Samuelson, died on Sunday, aged 75 years. The funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon, from Mr. Samuelson's residence, 2116 Indiana avenue, interment being at Oakwoods.

W. J. Smyth and family came home very unexpectedly from Lake Marie, because of a death from diphtheria in an adjoining cottage.

A. C. Kohlbrand, of E. C. Amling's, is at his old home in Cincinnati for a two weeks' visit, accompanied by his wife and daughter.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is receiving some nice Lilium album and roseum, the first seen in the market.

E. C. Amling reports a very fine demand for Beauties, the price having stiffened somewhat in the last few days.

The marriage of Miss Anita Wilkins and Leonard H. Vaughan took place Monday evening at the First Presbyterian Church, in the presence of several hundred guests. The ceremony was followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Vaughan will sail for Europe on Saturday to be absent three months.

Mrs. Horton is again at her desk at Bassett & Washburn's after a few weeks' vacation.

F. W. Timme has returned from a ten days' outing at The Dells of Wisconsin.

The Rookery building is far from what its name would imply. The rotunda is of white marble inlaid with gold leaf and the staircase is set off by two large Boston ferns recently placed in the marble vases. They are a fine addition and the use of plants in the large office buildings is one which might profitably be encouraged.

Weiland & Risch have Killarney and Richmond among their rose novelties for next season. Plants of both are making a fine growth.

George Reinberg will have, besides stock for planting his own place, about 125,000 field-grown carnation plants for the trade. His stock is growing finely.

Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Hauswirth returned on Sunday from a week's visit at Buffalo.

Mangel is out with a new automobile delivery wagon with plate glass sides.

Vaughan & Sperry are receiving large quantities of gladioli from an Ohio grower. The bulk of them are moved Gus Ahlers is again on duty at Wietors' after his annual period for resting up.

Among the week's visitors have been B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia; H. Krinke, of St. Paul, who is on his way to Germany; George Hunt, of Terre Haute, who was here to consult an oculist; Ludvig Mosbaek, Onarga, Ill., who sells so many bedding plants; Geo. Galloway, florist and undertaker, of Menominie, Wis.; C. W. Johnson, Rockford, Ill., buying stock for H. W. Buckbee's new range.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Summer is here in earnest and we are experiencing some extremely hot weather, with a thunder shower almost every day, and, as a result, good stock is out of the question and business does not cut any figure; many of the store people are trying to amuse themselves.

Various Notes.

The Pittsburg Rose & Carnation Co., in drilling for gas, struck oil and last Friday quite a good-sized party were at Bakerstown, including P. S. Randolph, E. C. Reineman, E. C. Ludwig, Arthur Langhans, T. P. Langhans and W. A. Clarke and wife. While the well flowed a few barrels, it will be several days before they get through the pay sand far enough to know how good the strike is. There were twenty-five or thirty oil men, who are interested in the territory about there, who have haunted the farm for several days, waiting the coming in of the well. While all hands on the place were greatly interested in the oil well, still it did not interfere with the carnation planting, which was going right along. The roses are all planted and looking good and Mr. Burki says that while a good oil well is all right in its way, nothing can interfere with his attention to his first love. After a pleasant afternoon and some refreshments, we all caught the evening train home, after wishing Mr. Burki a thousand-barrel flower.

The transportation committee, which has charge of arrangements for the trip to the twenty-first annual meeting of the S. A. F., expects to take a good-sized party to the convention. The club's itinerary will include Atlantic City. For further information consult committee, Fred Burki, John Bader or E. C. Reineman.

Ernest Zieger and wife have the sympathy of their many friends in the loss of their little daughter, who died July 17.

The Club Picnic.

The florists' picnic was a decided success, notwithstanding that it began raining about daylight and kept it up until noon. The largest crowd the club ever had was out on the boat and seemed to enjoy themselves all the way up the river and, after dinner on the boat, were ready to get off when it landed at Moss-side Grove. As it had quit raining the committee laid out the ground for the athletic sports, which truly were a howling success.

The ball game was between the retailers and growers. James Moore, as umpire, could not stand the "gaff" and retired in the fourth inning with the growers in the lead and W. A. Clarke was pressed into service. His decisions were not any more satisfactory, especially as the retailers took the lead in the next inning and won the prize, a disbudding knife for each player in the team. The game afforded much sport and, while some of the decisions on the plays were "rotten" enough, they did not have anything on some of the plays made. Joe Jones broke a finger in the second inning, the only accident of the day.

Among the athletic events, some of which were very good, the following is the list of winners:

100-yard dash, boys under 8, Fred Burki, Jr.; 100-yard dash, girls under 8, Marion Langhans; 100-yard dash, boys under 10, Lucian Ahlers; 100-yard dash, girls under 10, Myrtle Kraus; 100-yard dash, boys under 13, Milton Ahlers; 100-yard dash, girls under 13, Margaret Coleman; 100-yard dash, men, open, Howard Carney; 100-yard egg-spoon race, Miss Lease; 25-yard potato race Howard Carney; 100-yard bag race, Harry Ham; 100-yard dash, growers, John Wyland; 100-yard walk, men, Fred Zieger; 100 yard walk, ladies, Miss Lease; 100-yard dash, fat men, Edward McGrath; 100-yard dash, ladies, Miss Graf; 100-yard dash, young ladies, Mary Boss; 20-yard peanut race, James Uble; 100-yard dash, ladies, Miss Boss; 100-yard dash, young ladies, Miss Boss; 25-yard hop, Joseph Boss; high jump, Joseph Jones; running broad jump, Howard Carney; cake walk, Mrs. Whelan and daughter.

Through the generosity of John Evans, of the Quaker City Machine Works, it was necesasry for the committee to add another race, which was not on the program. F. Goodman carried off this prize.

Picnic Notes.

The dancing on the boat caught the young people and the dancing floor was usually filled.

Ed McGrath, who won the fat man's race, was pretty badly winded, but he wanted the pair of steins.

Fred Zieger was the only man on the grove who seemed to know what a heel and toe walk was and won the race.

While there were a few fat women in the party, none would acknowledge it and so the fat woman's race was made a 100-yard dash for women with lots of entries.

The broad jump was the best exhibition of the day. Some of the jumpers made good scores.

The women and girls seemed to take more interest in athletics than the men.

Uncle John Wyland was the oldest man to compete, but won his race and the thermometer.

Wm. Hamilton, superintendent of Allegheny park, was with us for the first time in years. Mr. Hamilton looks as young as he did twenty-five years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore F. Beckert and their family of nine children were with us for the first time and enjoyed a good day's outing.

We missed our friend, Wm. Falconer, but no doubt he had a good excuse.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

P. J. REGAN, Iowa City, Ia., was overcome by the heat July 13 and fell from a load of hay, but is recovering.

THE Bureau of Forestry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture will hereafter be known as the Forest Service, the scope being somewhat enlarged.

THE nursery land of Samuel C. Moon, Morrisville, Pa., is reported as sold to the Pennsylvania Railroad at a price which makes it possible to move the nursery to a new location not yet determined upon.

THE American Association of Nurserymen does not propose to relax its efforts to secure the return of trees in boxes to third class in freight schedules, nor does it propose to cease work until car minimums are reduced. The transportation committee is now to be assisted in its work by a traffic expert drawing a salary as secretary.

THE half-yearly meeting of the Western Association of Wholesale Nurserymen was held at Kansas City July 12 and 13. The principal act of interest was to strike out the word "wholesale" from the title, the purpose being to admit all western nurserymen to membership. Prospects were thought to be good for next season and the consensus was that, with no oversupply in sight, prices would be held firm.

GOOD SEASON IN MARYLAND.

Under date of July 11, J. G. Harrison & Sons, Berlin, Md. report on conditions in their section, as follows:

"Starting in with the planting season we have had very light rains, but often, and this has kept up pretty well through the season, and in all we have had a most excellent growing season.

"Starting in with our strawberry beds, they have made an unusually good growth for this time in the season, the peach trees are doing well and the apple blocks are in excellent condition and are making a very good growth. In other words, the stock is making a good growth and the trees are being well matured and we have had less expense than usual in keeping the nursery stock in good condition to this date.

"Prospects are for a good assortment of stock in general for this fall's planting and same will be in good condition. The winter did not affect us in any way and we did not lose anything by same, and we look forward to a good fall's planting."

PEONIES FOR THE SOUTH.

We have read many articles on the peony, both as to its culture and the use of the cut flowers, but I have never seen an article telling what kinds would do best in any given climate. I have bought plants from various sources and have imported both the herbaceous and tree varieties, but up to date I have none which proves a success. One of my customers had a very fine lot of flowers last spring on plants which had grown in a "grandmother's garden" which was planted something like 100 years ago. It is, of course, impossible to get this stock. How could one ascertain which are the proper kinds to grow in the Gulf states? A little information along this line would be greatly appreciated by us southerners.

Mr. Mills will attend the S. A. F. convention. He is state vice-president and hopes to have quite a party. Plenty of rain here and all stock looks good.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

THERE have been several days of "good corn weather" in the middle west as well as in the east.

UP to the present no decision has been handed out in the pickle seed damage suit mentioned in our issue of last week.

THE employees of Johnson & Stokes, Philadelphia, were entertained at the firm's trial grounds, Moorestown, N. J., July 15.

THE reports from the bean sections are more favorable this week. The weather is the important factor in the making of a crop.

ARTHUR H. LUCK, with the Iowa Seed Co., Des Moines, Iowa, sails today via Holland-American line for Europe, to be gone two months.

AT the recent election of the Indianapolis Board of Trade, Wm. S. Gilbreath was elected to serve a four-year term on the board of governors.

THE trustee in bankruptcy has notified the creditors of J. R. Ratekin, Shenandoah, Ia., that a dividend of twenty per cent will be paid July 24.

CHICAGO.—The present week has given excellent weather for onion set harvesting and the operation is in full swing with many of the growers here. The yield, so far as harvested, is below expectations.

IT is reported that the onion set harvest at Louisville, Ky., and at Indianapolis, Ind., is in full progress. The yield at both places is well up to expectations. The quality at Louisville is below the average, owing to rather large size.

FROM London comes the following as to beets: "The black aphis has been much in evidence on the plants of beet for seed; they find their way to them when the plants are in bloom, and seem to suck out their life juices. The outlook as to a probable seed crop is by no means assuring."

CARTERS, the English seedsmen, have 1,437 trials of peas this season and 120 varieties of sweet peas.

A BULLETIN of interest to seedsmen is entitled "Extermination of Johnson Grass," by W. J. Spillman, agrostologist, and issued May 20 by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Two bulletins of the U. S. Department of Agriculture of interest to seedsmen who handle grass seeds are "Range Management in the State of Washington," by J. S. Cotton, and "North American Species of Agrostis," by A. S. Hitchcock.

THE freesia bulbs grown in Guernsey, and for which there is such a demand from England, are grown in greenhouses but eighty per cent are grown in boxes and pots, which, immediately after blooming, are put outside to ripen and in consequence of the dry weather this summer are smaller in size.

CALIFORNIA SEED CROPS.

Under date of July 18, C. C. Morse & Co., Santa Clara, Cal., telegraph as follows:

"Most crops were badly injured by the hot wave. Leek, mustard, parsnips, turnips and radishes are a full crop. Spinach, all Yellow Globe onions, some sorts of lettuce and some sweet peas will be very short. Other crops will be light, but we still hope to fill contracts on most things. Sweet peas and onions will average less than one-third of a crop. It is too early for estimates on peas, beans and cucumbers, but these are looking only fair."

CONNECTICUT CROPS.

Everett B. Clark, of Milford, Conn., writes as follows under date of July 10: "The very favorable weather of the past two weeks is bringing crops forward rapidly. The cold and wet start resulted in no serious set-back to seed growers generally. The sweet corn was slow in starting, but there is a fine stand and the crop is looking far better than the one of a year ago at this time. Seed crops generally look well, but the acreage is very light, not over half the breadths put out this season. This is especially true of the onion seed crops. Most farmers were somewhat discouraged with the yields of the past few years and the price of the bulbs was so high this spring that they disposed of them, hence planted a very light acreage. Rain would be very welcome at present."

FRENCH SEED CROPS.

Hasslach & Roumanille, St. Remy-de-Provence, France, report as follows on the seed crops of the south of France:

A long, cold winter with ice from January 1 to 3, with 18 degrees of Fahrenheit, and again a sudden cool at Easterday, has destroyed many of our winter-cultivation and seriously crippled the plants that survived. This concerns especially beets, carrots, celery, mangold, radishes, wallflower and stocks. Further, on account of the constant wet weather during the month of May, scarcely a day of sunshine, a nice illustration of this year's delightful May, the plants cannot progress and are besides attacked by illness and insects. Consequently the aspect of the growing crops can be briefly described, as follows:

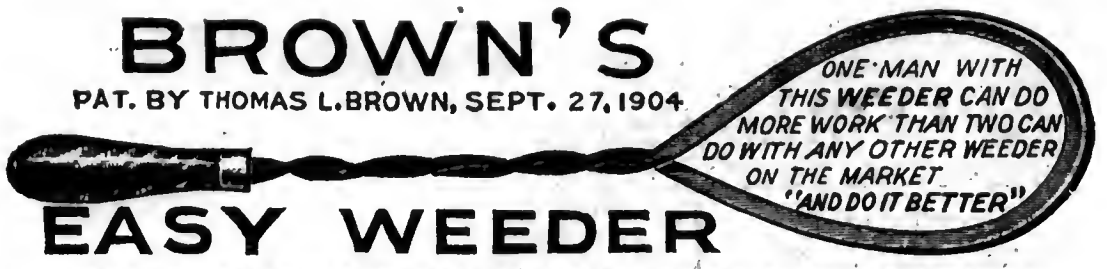
Artichoke, asparagus, condition fair. Beet and mangold, partly destroyed by cold, the survivors now attacked by insects; poor crops. Swiss chard, good average crop. Cauliflower, brocoli mammoth purple and white, in fair state and will ripen soon. Cabbage and savoy, have much suffered and are now attacked by insects; it is quite uncertain what will be harvested of the different varieties; in every case the crop will be insignificant. Carrots have suffered by cold, continuous rain in May; as frequently, in wet years caterpillars are now attacking the umbels, spoiling thus the greater part of the crop; we cannot yet give any idea as to the probable harvest. Celery, White Plume, Goldenheart, Celeriac, a near entire failure caused by ice. Chicory, endive, are secured and will give a satisfactory crop. Cucumber, large areas are in growth, the more as the last spring season a very satisfactory business has been done and all stock sold out in all the Town of Saint-Remy. Egg plants, and kitchenherbs, seem in good condition, only thyme and rosemary now harvested is a little crop. Kohlrabi, fully fifty percent destroyed. Leek, plantations are of little importance; price will be high. Lettuces, large areas planted, full healthy plants, promises well both in quality and quantity; Tom Thumb less extensive. Melon, in a sad condition; they do not fructify. Onion, red and white sorts, rather well; yellow sorts less abundant; prices probably high. Pepper, good, contract orders less important than last year. Pumpkin, vegetable marrow, good prospect. Radishes, small areas planted, and suffered by cold; crop presumed insignificant. Spinach, average crop. Tomato, rather well; prices for the currant sort higher than usually. This is about all that can be said of vegetable seeds today.

We might mention that flower seed crops have suffered much by cold. The harvest of early maturing sorts was benefited by the warm days at the end of June, of Bellis perennis, Centaurea candidissima, Cineraria maritima, Centaurea gymnocarpa, myosotis, sweet william and Viola tricolor maxima. Other crops in well prospect.

MAIL ORDER PROSPECTS.

"The future of the mail order business, as it appears to me," said W. R. Sears, president of Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago, who went into the seed trade last season, "lies in the ability of the mail order houses to put the merchandise into the hands of the people at figures nearest approaching original cost. Always maintaining quality (for the people's ability to judge quality cannot be overestimated; no mail order business can survive except as developed on a foundation of quality), the mail order firms will, by increasing volume of business, gradually narrow the margin between cost and price to the consumer, in every line. In short, as far as the general merchandise mail order business is concerned, it is going to be up to the fellow that can get the volume of business, enabling him to cut the margin of profit and make such prices as will virtually compel the trade of a very large percentage of the buying public. At the same time there is an abundant future for the mail order business in special lines outside of general merchandise where, by appealing to special classes of people and using new methods of introducing and selling, many a mail order business will be established and prove very successful."



We esteem the Review very highly for its Seed Trade News.—Binghamton Seed Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

The Review is certainly the paper of all papers for florists.—Chas. Pfeiffer, Sedalia, Mo.

BUFFALO.

Various Jottings.

The business could not be at a lower ebb than it has been for the past few days, and what makes it seem still more quiet is the reaction from the hubbub of last week.

After reading the accounts of the weather in some large cities, both east and west, we will not say a word.

Of all the things I hoped the Elks would see and be impressed with, first was our residence streets, and no doubt most of them saw. Other cities have larger and taller buildings, greater hotels, busier streets, but no city can surpass and few can equal our cool and beautiful avenues, with their well-kept lawns and palatial residences.

Only a few of the florists made special decorations in honor of the Elks. Miss Rachel Rebstock had a large galax plaque, with an elk's head in the center, made of white flowers. I mean a real, four-footed elk. S. A. Anderson made a very beautiful window. The whole outline of the window was white lilies, with an elk's head made with small echeverias on a background of English ivy. The workmanship and design were by Charles Schnell. Most all the others were satisfied to make prominent the colors, purple and white.

There must have been many florists among the hosts that visited our city, but their time was occupied downtown and we saw only a few. Dr. Rowlands, of Utica, an enthusiastic carnation grower, was here, and Mr. and Mrs. Phil Hauswirth, of Chicago, favored us with a call. The other Phil, ex-President Breitmeyer, was also in the ranks. Mr. Hauswirth made a flying trip to Washington and was back to his dear wife on Saturday morning.

Of course, the visiting florists made W. F. Kasting's wholesale house their headquarters and Mr. Kasting is a very big old Elk himself. Never has a convention in the history of Buffalo taken the city by storm as the one just past. The streets were given up to them. The parade on Wednesday was a stupendous affair, some dignified, some picturesque, some comical. It took three hours to pass a given point. "Hello Bill" still rings in our ears. Such meetings perhaps are good for the human race. We are not all alike and never will be. If we were it would be a very hum-drum world and the species would die out. But for an outpouring of animal spirits and an intaking of another sort, the B. P. O. E. certainly take the cake.

We were looking forward to seeing another Phil from Denver, Philip Scott, but sickness prevented. W. S.

The S. A. F. Convention is close at hand and everyone is interested in knowing all about

The "county fair" by society for the benefit of the Fresh Air Fund was a great success. All the local gardeners exhibited their best products. On Saturday the exhibits were auctioned off by W. J. Chalmers. Bunches of hot house grapes went for $50 each, prize lots of peas, beans, currants, and raspberries were knocked down at fancy bids. J. H. Moore paid $35 for a mess of cucumbers. The auction of exhibits brought a total of $1,115. Mr. Moore also paid $200 for a bunch of purple grapes, and Otto Young $250 for a bunch of white grapes. Mrs. S. B. Chapin won the silver cup offered by H. W. Buckbee for the best display of vegetables, and Mrs. J. J. Mitchell won the Vaughan cup for garden products.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.—Orin Smith, Jr., has leased his greenhouses to Jas. W. Neilson and retired from business.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—W. M. Stephenson will build a greenhouse 44x75 feet at his place on York road north of Seventieth avenue.

CANON CITY, COLO.—E. R. Bess will shortly add a propagating house 16x25 feet. Trade is about as usual at this time of year. Dry weather is bringing numberless insects, which are playing havoc with all gardens and keeping the sprayers busy.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade among the retailers is reported very dull the past week; still, considering that we are in mid-summer, quite a lot of funeral work is being made up. This is, of course, all that the retailers depend upon. At the wholesale houses, where most of the trade congregates each morning, we hear in conversation a great deal of talk on the club's outing this week and the S. A. F. convention next month.

Good stock is not at all plentiful but of lower grades there is enough for all. Prices do not change much if any. Clean-up sales are still going on and one has to order the day before, or come early, to obtain desirable stock. Beauties are coming in somewhat better, with fancies limited, shorts more plentiful. Other roses, such as Brides and Maids, are poor. Liberties are good. Carnations are in demand and not near enough good stock comes in to go around. Sweet peas are not extra good, asters not yet in large supply, gladioli more than enough. Tuberose stalks are fine. Other outdoor stock sells poorly. There are plenty of greens of all kinds, including fine smilax and asparagus strings and sprays.

Club Meeting.

The July meeting of the club proved very interesting and a large number were present. The nomination of officers for the ensuing year was a special feature, as was the question of incorporating the club. The meeting opened at 2 o'clock, with President Juengel in the chair and with all of the other officers present. President Halstead, of the local growers' club, was a visitor.

The chairman of the flower show committee made a lengthy report, announcing that Westminster hall, 3806 Olive street, had been engaged for the show. The date is November 7 to 10. The outing committee reported that everything was in readiness for a good time at Mollenbrock's grove July 20. The matter of incorporating the club was laid over until the next meeting.

The nomination of officers for the different offices took place as follows: For president, J. F. Ammann, J. W. Danford, Frank Ellis and C. C. Sanders; for vice-president, John Steidle, A. G. Fehr, George Windler and Rude Windt; for secretary, Emil Schray, J. J. Beneke, O. G. Koenig; for treasurer, Fred H. Meinhardt, E. W. Guy and George Angermueller; for three trustees, one for three years, one for two years and one for one year, there were nine candidates, Carl Beyer, Frank Weber, A. G Bentzen, V. Gorley, Henry Lohrenz, Fred H. Weber, W. J. Pilcher, A. Y. Ellison, John R. Steinecke and Frank H. Fillmore. The election will take place at the next regular meeting, August 10.

Frank Weber said that as the club had accepted his invitation to hold its September meeting at his place, the ladies are especially invited. The more the pleasanter the gathering.

Various Notes.

Frank J. Fillmore & Son will open a flower store at 3310 Meramec street the latter part of this month. This is only a few blocks away from their greenhouses. Frank, Jr., will be married next week to Miss Lydia Gabler and will live over the store. Congratulations are now in order. Mamma Fillmore will be the head of the artistic staff at the new place.

R. J. Windler will open a retail store this fall at the corner of Grand avenue and Shenandoah street.

Mr. Bergestermann, late of the firm of Pape & Bergestermann, is building a store at the corner of Grand avenue and Arsenal street, to be opened this fall as a retail flower store.

L. Baumann, of Chicago, is calling on the trade, selling florists' supplies.

From the daily press we learn that about 900 trees in Forest park have been killed by the fumes of the lime kilns and foundries nearby and that Park Commissioner Aull fears that this will be fatal to nearly all of the trees in the park.

Mrs. Carl Beyer is on a visit to her mother in the country. Carl will go after her next week, when they will make a trip up north for about ten days.

Mrs. C. C. Sanders, Walter, Laura and Jessie Sanders, are back from an enjoyable trip to the northern lakes. The new home will be completed early in September.

Chas. Schoenle has left the employ of Mrs. M. M. Ayers. He will be married this week Wednesday to Miss Rose Arata, who has a retail store at Lafayette and Jefferson avenues. Both are well known to the trade and should make a happy couple. Congratulations are now in order.

The Florists' Club, at its meeting last week Thursday, decided to offer a special prize of $225 at the fall flower show for American Beauties, the winner to have his choice, cash or cup.

The four wholesale houses have agreed to close at 5 p. m. until September 1.

VICTORIA, B. C.

Matters of Interest.

On July 1 the government entertained the Society of American Mining Engineers in the parliament buildings. Several residents filled two tables with really good outdoor roses, which proved a great attraction and were a revelation to many of our own citizens. Outdoor roses have been extra good this season, owing to the absence of mildew, which is the great drawback to their culture here. Most of our wild flowers are over. Spiræa Aruncus is just past but its place is filled by S. discolor, a truly magnificent shrub which almost attains the dignity of a tree. It adorns the open spots in woods and country with its light, feathery white panicles. This shrub should be more grown. It is certainly hardy. I have found it in the high mountains, where the thermometer falls far below zero.

With regret I have to chronicle the death of the wife of G. A. Knight, of Mt. Tolmie Nursery. Her demise will be a great loss to him. For many years she has been an able assistant in his business.

H. Dumbleton has built a new house for water lilies. In the center pool he has installed a Victoria regia.

Mr. Sowerby, of Covent Garden Nursery, reports a very heavy crop of excellent tomatoes. Tomato is king in this establishment as a summer crop.

A. J. Woodward, Ross Bay Nursery, who already owns 100,000 feet of glass, is just preparing to cover about another acre and a half with glass for general purposes. His houses are used for flowers in the winter and tomatoes and cucumbers in the summer. Lettuce also is no inconsiderable item. He reports crops fair but prices ruling lower this season. E. A. W.

COAST HAS GOOD STOCK.

I note in the REVIEW of July 6 that a correspondent makes the comment that San Francisco "has the reputation of handling poorer stock than any other large city in the United States." I beg to differ decidedly with C. L. A. in that San Francisco either handles poor stock or even has the reputation among people who have traveled enough to make comparisons or draw conclusions. I have seen the best that has been shown in our large cities at frequent intervals for a period extending over thirty years and have yet to meet the grower or florist from any part of the world who did not give California, and San Francisco and its suburbs in particular, the plum for producing flowers on a scale undreamed of in less favored localities.

The reason is easy to guess, of course. Fancy a climate where the sun shines every day in the year, where on last Christmas week my boys were driving around town in their shirt sleeves delivering orders, where our summers rarely go over 65 degrees, and then compare these facts with the torrid east and frigid middle states and pretend to say they can compete with us in the quality of flowers produced.

The cut of Hannah Hobart recently published in the REVIEW is a good sample of what we have to show in the middle of summer and this week I visited the greenhouses where they are grown and found thousands of blooms of this and many other varieties equally as large. I have called at the largest places in the east at a corresponding season of the year and have seen the best that was to be offered, and it is safe to say our flowers are fully twice the size and, as for color and substance, there is absolutely no comparison.

Again, in the middle of winter, when the thermometer goes down almost out of sight in your frozen east, here we grow flowers with only a little artificial heat for a few weeks, more to force the crop than for any necessity to keep out the frost.

It is easy to see I do not attribute anything to our superior knowledge of flower growing but to the mildness and adaptability of our climate. We have the same success with roses, as they respond fully as well to the surroundings as carnations and, as I stated before, I have yet to meet the eastern grower who is not amazed at the quality of the stock grown in this neighborhood, and as for the general tourists, they usually exhaust their vocabularies in describing the floral wonders of California before they are half an hour in town.

Regarding the prices received by the growers for their stock, C. L. A. notes that there has been an increase of thirty-three and one-third per cent in the past ten years. I agree with him there, but that is a decided advantage from any point of view. The reason for this is that we have such an abundance of flowers that a Californian will not be satisfied with anything except the very best and stock that would be considered fancy in other less favored localities will not stand the test here and does not bring the highest price, all of which goes to show the perfection attained in the quality of flowers grown in the neighborhood of San Francisco. I hope that the price will increase thirty-three and one-third per cent more in the next ten years, for at the best it is not too high and growers usually do not get rich, even in California.

Regarding Japanese gardeners and nurserymen, a subject of vital importance to our craft and one that is probably being more discussed by our growers at present than anything else, I will have something more to say next week. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had a welcome change in the weather from that of last week. The average temperature has been 65 degrees, as against 90 degrees. Roses, carnations and lilies came in so fast

HANNAH HOBART THE PRIDE OF CALIFORNIA

The grand prize winner in competition with the latest and very best products in Carnations, east or west, for the last eight years.

Mr. John A. Balmer, of Clealum, Washington, after his visit to our nurseries in January, 1902, wrote an article for a trade paper in which he said: "The Hannah Hobart is really a remarkable flower, never less than four inches, and frequently four and one-half inches across. In color it is a shade deeper than Lawson, but the petal arrangement is quite different, in this respect it most resembles the old Jubilee, but of course the color is different. I saw two large houses of it at Sievers', and the sight is one long to be remembered, hundreds of blooms and not a poor one in the lot, and everyone the exact counterpart of the other, no burst calyxes, but every flower supported on a 24-inch stem, and standing up like soldiers. There is certainly no carnation of its color that can equal it."

The above is a truthful statement of facts by a very competent gentleman, and if needing verification, the simple assertion that the flowers of this magnificient variety of Carnation have been sold wholesale as high as $1.50 per dozen, and none less than $1 per dozen up to date, should be enough to convince anybody of its intrinsic value. (See illustration of an average bloom in the Florists' Review, June 1, 1905.)

The constant inquiry by everyone who has seen the plants in flower is: "When will the Hannah Hobart be for sale?" This led us at last to the conclusion to distribute the same next year, and we are ready to book orders from now on for delivery beginning Jan. 1, 1906.

Send your orders in early because they will be filled strictly in rotation. Price, $3.00 per 12; $15.00 per 100; $120.00 per 1000.

for a few days that there was positively no way to handle them and a great many were unused, but the cooler weather, together with the fact that many carnation growers are now changing their stock, makes a much shorter supply and I expect we will have a little rise in price very soon. Outdoor stock was also damaged somewhat by the warm spell. Sweet peas suffered the most and it has been almost impossible to get any long-stemmed stock this week. Dahlias, coreopsis and gladioli are in good supply and considerable quantities are being used to keep up appearances. Valley is scarce and in some demand. Business is very fair considering the season. It is better than it was at this time a year ago, with both the stores and the growers.

Various Notes.

L. A. Bishop is in Washington on a three weeks' visit.

H. Plath reports a good demand for small ferns, both in thumb pots and flats.

John H. Sievers & Co. have booked orders for many thousands of their seedling carnation, Hannah Hobart. A visit to their greenhouses and a glimpse of several houses in full bloom at this time is a sight long to be remembered.

Peter Thiesen, of Golden Gate, is cutting some fine Kaiserin. Sievers & Boland handle most of his stock.

The California Nursery Co., of Niles, has a very large stock of field grown roses to offer for the coming season.

TEMPORARY HOUSE.

I wish to heat a sash house 20x135, sides eighteen inches high and boarded, eight feet to ridge. The walks are dug out and the beds are solid. I want to use this house for spring and fall, say up to January 1 for cyclamens, primroses, ferns, etc., and from the middle of March for bedding plants. I wish to heat this house by steam to about 55 degrees at night in New Jersey climate. How large a boiler is necessary and how many runs of 1-inch pipe? The boiler will be below the level of the ground. Kindly give arrangement of piping.

W. S. H.

You can heat your house satisfactorily in the following manner: Secure a boiler rated for 1,000 feet of radiation and sink it in a pit so as to make returns higher than top of the boiler if possible. Provide a 2-inch flow pipe under the ridge of the house, carrying same to the most distant end of the house, there to divide it, using two 1½-inch or 2-inch pipes to connect with a manifold of five 1-inch pipes on each side wall. These manifolds should have a gentle slope toward the boiler unless the slope of the house is sufficient to insure a quick return of all condensed water through the manifolds.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

An unusually hot week, with the mercury hovering around 90 degrees, together with the flitting of society belles and beaux to cooler climates, caused a stagnation in business in most of the stores.

There is very little good stock on the market. Roses are small and off color. Carnations do not hold up well, the excessive heat causing them to go to sleep very quickly, and it is an impossibility to get even fair prices. Sweet peas and outdoor flowers are getting scarce and of very poor quality and it is almost impossible to clear things up. A few funerals of well known people helped some of the stores. There is still quite a demand for pot plants, such as ferns, palms, begonias and rubbers. A few weddings the latter part of the month will give some of the decorators something to do, but we have reached our summer level and quiet business may be looked for from now on.

Various Notes.

Jacob Tobler is winding up his spring business preparatory to taking a few weeks' vacation and he is fixing up his fishing tackle, with which he intends to catch a goodly share of the finny tribe.

R. S. Brown & Son are tearing down some of their houses on Prospect avenue and putting up some fine houses at their Maywood place. Their increasing business necessitated an increase in room.

E. A. Humfeld has some of the finest mums your correspondent has ever seen here, planted on his benches, and we predict for him a banner crop.

W. L. Rock is finishing some very fine houses at his place and contemplates extensive improvements in the near future.

Kansas City will be represented at the convention next month at Washington, a number having expressed their intention of being present. What is the matter with this city next year?

Quite a number of hallway florists have dropped out of business the past week, not being able to stand the pressure of poor business, but with the advent of cooler weather we can look for them again.

Miss M. Dalley seems to be doing quite a nice business, even in these dull times, having one of the best locations, coupled with untiring energy.

D. Freudenthal is also doing a nice business at his store, and, together with handling his local trade, keeps the majority of the stores here supplied.

NARCISSUS.

NEW ORLEANS.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society holds an annual outing of greater duration than the trips of the trade organizations of the northern cities. This year it was to Grand Isle, in the Gulf, and began early Saturday morning, ending late Monday evening. The date was July 8 to 10. This is the way the Picayune's star reporter led off a two-column account of the affair:

Where melancholy bayous wend through reedy banks a sluggish course to the restless sea; where shallow lakes toss whitecaps in the salty breeze; where the cry of the wild bird is ever to be heard, and where the very atmosphere seems to breathe of the earth primeval, twenty-three members of the New Orleans Horticultuiral Society and seven of their guests spent the better part of Saturday, and as the first hours of a new day were adding their mite to make up the greatness of time's score, from the main deck of a stanch little steamer the excursionists made out in the shadowy darkness the snowy crest of the ocean billows, heard the crashing of the deluge on the distant beach, and so came to their journey's end

There are many unfamiliar sights on such a trip as this and the affair was hugely enjoyed. President H. Papworth and Vice-president Charles Eble were unable to make the trip, and in their absence Secretary C. R. Panter was the presiding officer. With Mr. Panter as sort of master of ceremonies was Richard Eichling, manager for U. J. Virgin. At Saturday morning's breakfast the roll was called and the following members of the society were found to be present: Mr. Panter, John Eblen, treasurer; Richard Eichling, C. W. Eichling, J. H. Menard, E. Valedjo, J. A. Newsham, Paul A. Chopin, J. St. Mard, F. Faessel, B. G. Wichers, W. G. Wichers, H. Elwell, F. Zeigeler, R. Eilers, O. Werner, Frank Brocker, F. Calongne, H. Kraak, Otto Abele, Paul Eble and M. M. DeLapouyade. The guests were: R. P. Upton, Charles Schenck, W. Stolzenthaler, M. Stolzenthaler, L. Beaudean, J. B. Dauenhauer and E. Wichers.

WINONA, MINN.—J. W. Booth is receiver for the Winona Floral Co. The first meeting of creditors is set for July 25 at the office of Wm. Burns, referee in bankruptcy. H. W. Rogers and R. G. Guenther, members of the firm, have filed individual petitions in bankruptcy but their assets and liabilities are inconsiderable.

MOLINE, ILL.

The Tri-City Florists' Association held a regular monthly meeting July 13, at Staack & Sons, in this city. There was nearly a full attendance and the session proved exceedingly interesting. The work of the past year was reviewed. After this plans for the coming six months were discussed. It was decided to hold discussions monthly, the president to announce the subject at the meeting preceding the one at which it is to be discussed. It was also decided to hold the annual picnic of the association at Suburban park on July 27. This picnic is an annual event and has proved most enjoyable in the past.

E. Sly, of Iona, Mich., was present as a guest of the club and made an excellent talk.

John Temple, John Staack and Theodore Ewoldt are to attend the convention at Washington.

MIGNONETTE.

A few weeks ago Mr. Scott told us in the REVIEW that in starting mignonette seed to use hellebore dusted on the plants to kill the green worm. What we want to know is, shall we use it pure or mixed with air-slaked lime and dust it on the plants when they are dry or just after spraying? Do the plants want shade on the glass until the middle of September or shall we grow them in the bright sun all the time? We are planting our seed now, July 12. A. R. & S.

We always used the hellebore pure, as we bought it, sprinkling the mignonette before we dusted with the hellebore. It is not likely you will be troubled with the little green worm for six weeks yet, as the yellow cabbage butterfly does not appear with us until the end of August. A light shade would be a benefit for another month, but once the mignonette plants are an inch or so high they want the fullest light. W. S.

CENTRALIA, ILL.—J. W. Ross is building a new house 30x144 and will put up another 30x160, largely increasing his capacity, but not then giving him supplies equal to the rapidly increasing demand. He has his chrysanthemums and carnations benched in fine shape.

Araucaria Excelsa
OUR SPECIALITY.

Fill your empty houses now and make 100 per cent on your money while you sleep. Notice—When you undertake anything, do it well or not at all. This is our motto adopted 10 years ago when we imported the first lot of this well known pot plant, the

from Belgium.

These everlasting green foliaged pot plants are growing more in favor by the tasteful plant buyers of this land from year to year. Please watch the growth of our importation during the last 10 years: first year 100, second 250, third 500, fourth 1000, fifth 2,000. This year (1905) which is the 10th anniversary of our first importation, our spring importation amounted to 5,000. All these are grown for us under contract by an Araucaria specialist in Belgium. I must say for the benefit of my customers that they were never before so nice and large for the money as this year. I herewith quote you special prices on these, in or out of:

CINCINNATI.

Trade continues at the usual summer level; not much doing but funeral work. Stock is also in keeping with the season; not in large supply and roses and carnations both microscopical in size.

On Saturday evening the Florists' Society held its monthly meeting and installed its new officers. Wm. Murphy is now serving his third term in the chair.

We hope to take a goodly delegation to the convention and every indication is that we shall not be disappointed.

It is a mistake that Cincinnati will ask for the convention in 1906. We want it in 1909, when Cincinnati will have a big anniversary celebration all summer.

ATLANTA, GA.

Trade in our city has been very good, considering the season. Stock is rather scarce; that is, first-class stuff.

Some of our local florists are contemplating big changes for the coming winter season. The West View Floral Co. and The Dahl Co. will soon change the location of their stores, owing to the fact that the buildings in which they are located have changed hands and some large improvements are anticipated.

James Burpitt, a pioneer florist of this city, was found dead in his bed on the morning of July 7, the cause being heart failure. He was to have accepted a position as foreman at the Dahl Company greenhouses this coming fall.

W. J. L.

ATHOL, MASS.

George W. Sutherland is planning to erect two more greenhouses, as the demand for more flowers has nccessitated such a move. The new houses will be 11x25 and 22x100 feet respectively. It is intended to utilize the smaller for a palm house, and the larger for the growing of carnations. The house which is now used for growing carnations will be devoted to roses. It is hoped to have the two new houses ready for use in the fall. Mr. Sutherland has bought a new boiler, which is used in operating the fertilizer pump. There is no more hustling young business man in Athol than Mr. Sutherland, and he is making a fine success in the florist business.

Mt. Vernon, Ia.—C. S. Meeks has taken Adair Cowan into partnership and the firm will enlarge the glass and the business.

SULPHUR FOR MITES.

Flowers of sulphur is one of the best remedies for plant mites, such as the red spider. It may be applied in several forms, the simplest of which is its use as a dry powder dusted with powder bellows or any broadcasting device, preferably in the early morning. The flowers of sulphur may be easily applied also with any other insecticide, such as kerosene emulsion, resin wash, or a soap wash, mixing it up first into a paste and then adding it to the spray tank at a rate of from one pound to two pounds to fifty gallons.

Somewhat more uniform results can be obtained perhaps by getting the sulphur into solution, either dissolving it with lye or by boiling it with lime.

In making the lye-sulphur wash, first mix twenty pounds of flowers of sulphur into a paste with cold water, then add ten pounds of pulverized caustic soda (98 per cent). The dissolving lye will boil and liquefy the sulphur. Water must be added from time to time to prevent burning, until a concentrated solution of twenty gallons is obtained. Two gallons of this is sufficient for fifty gallons of spray, giving a strength of two pounds of sulphur and one of lye to fifty gallons of water. An even stronger application can be made without danger to the foliage. This mixture can also be used in combination with other insecticides.

The chemical combination of sulphur and lime known as sulphide of lime is perhaps a better liquid sulphur solution than the last as a remedy for mites. It may be very cheaply prepared by boiling together for an hour or more, in a small quantity of water, equal parts of flowers of sulphur and stone lime. A convenient quantity is prepared by taking five pounds of sulphur and five of lime and boiling in three or four gallons of water until the ingredients combine, forming a brownish liquid. This may be diluted to make 100 gallons of spray.

Almost any of the insecticides with which the sulphur application may be made will kill the leaf or rust mites, but the advantage of the sulphur arises from the fact that it forms an adhering coating on the leaves, which kills the young mites coming from the eggs, which are very resistant to the action of insecticides and result in the plants being reinfested unless protected by the sulphur deposit.—Bulletin.

PIPING IN MICHIGAN.

I am building a greenhouse 18x70 feet, walls five feet and ridge eleven feet. I would like to use hot water in a 2-inch feed pipe and 1¼-inch returns. In the climate of Michigan, how shall I pipe?

W. E. G.

If you will use a 2½-inch flow pipe under the ridge from the boiler to the most distant end of the greenhouse and there divide into three 2-inch pipes to supply a manifold of six 1¼-inch pipes under each side bench and a manifold with five 1¼-inch pipes under the center bench, one riser or flow pipe can be made to supply the necessary radiation to maintain a temperature of 65 to 70 degrees during severe weather, provided the water is maintained at 180 degrees. This will necessitate a good sized expansion tank, thirty to fifty gallons, located six to ten feet above the highest point in the system. The high point in the system should preferably be at the point where the main flow pipe divides to supply the return manifolds.

L. C. C.

IMPOSSIBLE.

Will you kindly let us know how much 2-inch pipe we shall need to heat a house 20x50 feet, four and one-half feet to the plates and eleven feet to the ridge. The house stands out in the open, New Jersey climate, and has twenty inches of glass in the walls. We want 50 degrees and not to have the water in the boiler over 50 degrees at any time. All pipes must be under the benches.

W. H. F.

Because of the writer's haste or a bad pen, I am not certain of the dimensions of the house but assume that it is 20x50 feet. If this is the case it can be heated to a temperature of 50 degrees by the use of ten 2-inch pipes the length of the house, provided the water is heated to 180 degrees. It would not be possible to pipe the house so as to maintain a temperature of 50 degrees in the house with water in the heater at 50 degrees.

L. C. C.

GLAZING.

I want to build a small greenhouse and would like to know the best way of putting on glass, to butt or lap it; also would a cap on the sash bars be better than to glaze it in the ordinary way? When glass is butted do you use anything between the panes of glass?

L. V. B.

It is rather cruel to ask me to answer the above, for I have been and still am a sincere believer in butted glass for the commercial man and practice what I preach, for it has many advantages, yet, in this case, a small greenhouse for a beginner, I would recommend that the glass be lapped. Bed the glass firmly and evenly in the best quality putty and fasten with a good glazing point. You cannot use a cap on lapped glass. There is no need of it. Let the lap be no more than a quarter of an inch. Less is still better.

A little gratuitous advice is to send a sketch of your intended greenhouse to one of the practical and reliable horticultural builders, who will get out and ship you every piece of material, cut and fitted, of clear cypress lumber, and it is only fun to put it together.

There is one question overlooked. When we butt glass nothing but the cap is used. Putty or any metal strip between butted glass is a big mistake.

W. S.

STEAM OR HOT WATER.

From my boiler a 4-inch feed pipe rises to a considerable height, turns and enters the greenhouses, then drops in a 3-inch pipe to where it enters the 2-inch floor overhead in the house. This falls slightly to the far end, where a perpendicular pipe goes down to the coil of 1½-inch pipe beneath the benches. A 3-inch pipe enters the boiler and from the lowest point a 1-inch pipe is carried to the expansion tank. I can use either steam or hot water, but when I fire hard, when using hot water, the pipes near the boiler seem to fill up with steam and hot water. We can hear the water and steam boiling, and it even shakes the pipes, but the water seems to stop circulating. The pipes farthest from the boiler, and the return pipes, get cool. I can close the pipe that leads to the expansion tank, turn the city water into the boiler and leave it turned on; then it works all right. I can fire as hard as I like. The harder I fire the hotter the pipes get. But I have to carry the city pressure, which is from fifty to seventy-five pounds, which is more than I care to carry on my system. The water rises to the highest point over the boiler. From there it is down grade all the way back to the boiler. To heat with steam I draw the water off to the proper amount in the boiler, but I would prefer to heat with water if I could get it to work properly. Can you suggest a remedy?

C. L. R.

If I interpret your description correctly there are too many crooks in the flow pipe to work well with hot water. If the high point could be brought on an even grade with the 2-inch flow and the expansion tank elevated to ten or twelve feet above the highest point in the system, or even higher, there would be little danger of the heat driving the water out of the system as it now appears to do.

ANNOUNCEMENT

THE GREENHOUSE COMPANY

Kearney Ave., JERSEY CITY, N. J.

Take pleasure in announcing that they have been incorporated under the Laws of New Jersey, with a capital stock of $200,000 for the manufacture and erection of all kinds of greenhouse structures, and also the manufacturing and supplying of greenhouse structural requisites such as cypress sash bar material, ventilation machinery, iron and wood frame beds and benches, hotbed sash and frame, white lead greenhouse putty, pipe, fittings, valves and boilers for greenhouse heating.

We have purchased the plant of the Phillips Mfg. Co., which we are enlarging and improving.

We will be pleased to submit sketch and estimates for greenhouse erected complete, or for material cut and fitted ready for erection. Correspondence invited.

MIXING PUTTY.

Kindly give the best receipt for mixing putty and the best season to putty glass to keep it from cracking. C. G.

We have never made our putty, but bought it of some horticultural builder and then added one twentieth of its weight of pure white lead. Do you mean by "puttying glass" filling up the space between the edge of the glass and the sash bar, where the putty has rotted? If so, then it should be done during a dry spell in August or September. No greenhouse man uses putty on the outside of the roof. It is sure to peel off in a few years and if the putty is sound beneath the glass, a heavy coat of white lead paint will make a tight roof and add greatly to the appearance of the house. W. S.

PIPING FOR IOWA.

Please tell me how to place my pipes for heating a greenhouse 20x75, ten feet to ridge and with side walls four feet high and double boarded against Iowa winds. There is glass in one gable. We need 54 degrees and have 2-inch pipe for flow and 1¼-inch for returns for hot water. O. C.

I think you can use your 2-inch and 1¼-inch pipe for heating with hot water in the following way: Under each side bench place a 2-inch flow, arranged to return through a manifold of six 1¼-inch pipes. For the center bench carry a 2-inch riser under the ridge of the house to the most distant end and then drop to return under the bench through six 1¼-inch returns. This will provide the necessary amount of radiation with water at 180 degrees. L. C. C.

TWEMLOW'S

Old English Glazing Putty

For Bedding Glass in Sash or for Filling Cracks or Seams In Roof Joints or Frames of Greenhouses or Hotbeds.

It is used in Machine or Bulb. If too thick for bulb thin with a little Pure Linseed Oil, boiled. So thinned, it can be brushed into any crack or leak, making a solid filling. It makes a solid bed, impervious to moisture, and holds glass in its place, and will stop any crevice or fault. When once set on dry wood it does not heave. As regards the goods, the article is no new invention, but simply an article of the very best class, to do thoroughly good work, like old-time gentlemen expected when sashes were made with lead, and small panes of glass used that caught the water and leaked unless set with an elastic putty which once set by a mechanic was expected to remain, and did remain in good shape. This Twemlow's Old English Glazing Putty does; nothing more, nothing less. SOLD BY THE FLORISTS' SUPPLY HOUSES.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Small Ferns.

You ought to lay in a good stock of young ferns just now, for use in filling the ferneries during the winter. They are usually pretty well cleaned up by February and then you have to buy at an increased price and get decreased quality. If you lay in a good stock now, either small plants from 2-inch pots or flats, that are once transplanted, you can keep them over winter in 2½-inch pots. It is desirable for the purpose that you have a good plant in as small a pot as possible.

When you receive them, put them on a bench on which is spread at least one-inch of sand or coal ashes, so that they are not continually drying out, and when firing commences they should be still further protected against the heat from the pipes. The list of the ferns used for the purpose includes many genera, not to mention species, and a difference of temperature may suit different genera, but you cannot bother with that and 55 to 60 degrees at night will do for all.

I have repeatedly seen these little ferns in 2½-inch pots standing on a bench of inch boards with a very slight covering of sand and in many places the sand washed away. In many spots the little plants were parched from the heat below and were drying up. Ferns are found growing in various conditions and environments, but nearly all those we grow for ferneries like a warm, moist atmosphere with coolness at the roots.

There is a great variety of ferns used for small ferneries. The favorite Adiantum cuneatum is not considered a good fern for the purpose, but that is because it is used too often when the fronds are immature. We will leave that out, as there are plenty of others. Here are a few of the best: Aspidium tsussimense, Davallia stricta, Nephrodium hirtipes, Microlepia hispida, Onychium Japonicum, Pteris cretica Mayii, P. cretica albo-lineata, P. Ouvardi, P. serrulata cristata, Selaginella Emmeliana and S. flabellata. Included in the list could be small plants of Pteris Argyræa, Nephrolepis Scottii and Cyrtomium falcatum.

A Dwelling-room Fern.

One of the very best ferns for a room is Cibotium Schiedei, beautiful in every respect and, although not so robust looking, it does finely almost anywhere you put it. Buy young stock now and it will grow into value. In addition to the ferns, do not forget that Asparagus plumosus is one of the very best plants for small ferneries. It will outlast most of the ferns. If you have not sown seed or have not a stock of young plants, buy them. We fill ferneries entirely with this graceful asparagus and they are always satisfactory.

Alternantheras.

The little alternantheras will be always in use as long as any formal flower gardening is done. Some varieties are easily wintered and some are not, unless you can keep up a high temperature. Among the latter is the best of them all, A. paronychioides major. A good plan to perpetuate a stock is to prepare flats with two inches of very sandy loam and insert cuttings thickly. They root quickly if kept watered on any bench or in a cold frame and by fall are strong little plants and winter well in these flats if kept almost dry during the dark days of winter, in a temperature of 55 degrees.

Clean Out the Fly.

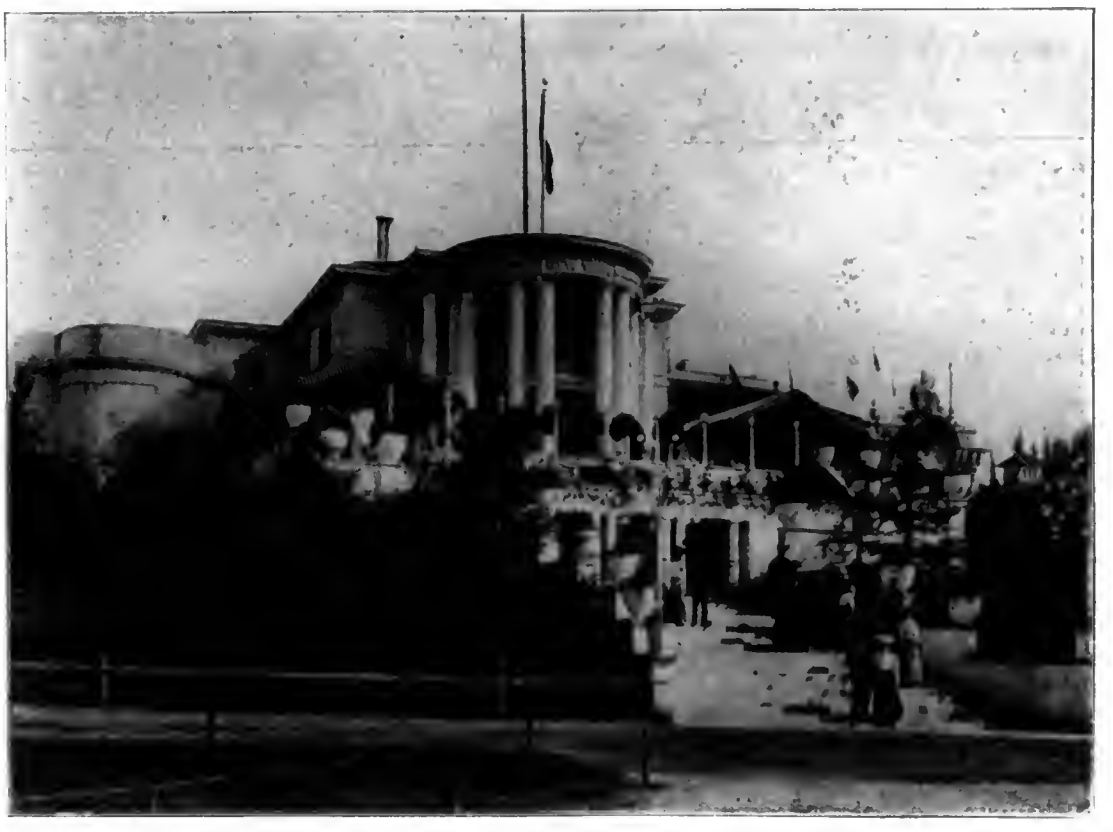
The black fly as well as the green is troublesome with many plants just now, and so are thrips and spider, and it is not always convenient to fumigate. There is great comfort in the use of the Knapsack Eclipse compressed air pump and Nikoteen. Some say you can dilute this 500 times in water. We have never measured the proportion, but we know in practice that you can fill the cylinder two-thirds full of water, add a 2-inch pot full of the Nikoteen and then pump in air until you get the desired pressure. This will kill thrips and spider and at the above strength it will discolor no flower. We applied it to Ivory chrysanthemums when in bloom last fall and there was not the slightest stain on the flower. The Nikoteen is expensive, yet a 2-inch pot is sufficient for a house of chrysanthemums 20x100 and what a blessing it is for American Beauties that are troubled at this time with thrips. The fight against our enemies, the insects, is really the most important part of our work and the least excusable if neglected, for it is not science you have to apply, simply faithfulness and energy.

Pelargoniums.

These rather neglected plants will have made a good growth since their flowering time and should soon be ripening their growth. Put them where they will get the fullest light and keep them slightly on the dry side, as you will want to cut them down hard at the end of August.

Cinerarias.

Not many florists care about cinerarias before February on to Easter and seed sown the middle of August is in plenty of time for that. Seed sowing of any kind is rather a risky operation in the hot months, as it is coolness you want, not heat, and to be cool you must shade, and too much shade is a poor start for the young plants. A north-side house where there is light without direct sunshine, is a favorable place. There is considerable said of late about Cineraria stellata for the decoration of a conservatory. They are excellent, showy plants and may be valuable for cutting, but we do not think they will be ever largely in favor as a florists' plant. They occupy too much room for the price you can obtain for them.



WILLIAM SCOTT.

VARIEGATED VINCAS.

Please tell me the treatment required for variegated vincas so as to have good vines in the spring. What temperature and position do they require? J. W. C.

There are several ways of raising plants of this, the most useful of all drooping plants for vases or veranda boxes. For many years we found the following method the cheapest and best for raising 4,000 or 5,000 young plants annually:

Plant out a few dozen plants in the spring in good soil. They will by September have made a large growth, from which you can get any number of cuttings. You can cut up their long growths into cuttings of two joints, discarding the very tender tips and also the woody, hard growth near the crown of the plant. They root readily in sand the end of September or anywhere in October, or before a very severe frost. Keep the sand moist. All the cuttings will root, but it takes a month for the hardest cuttings to do so. Pot into 2-inch and keep in a temperature of 45 to 50 degrees until February. Then shift into 3-inch or, if making a strong growth, into 3½-inch pots.

Remember the growth that is useful, that makes the "vine," starts from the eyes beneath the soil. The top of the cutting you put in the sand in October will make a feeble growth, but it will never amount to anything. If given strong, rich soil and firmly potted into the 3-inch pots they will soon be sending up four or five strong shoots that by the middle of May should be fifteen to eighteen inches long and many be longer.

The object desired in growing all plants for vases or window boxes is to obtain as big a plant as you can with as small a pot as possible. You could lift these vinca plants from the garden in October and put into 5 or 6-inch pots and, when the tops become shabby, say in January, cut them off close to the pot. A large lot of young growth would soon start and by May would make a fine plant, but the ball of roots would be too large for use except in very large vases or boxes.

Another plan to obtain fine plants in spring is to late in June plant out some spring propagated plants from 2-inch pots. (The vinca roots very readily in February and March with a slight bottom heat.) In September lift these plants and squeeze them into 3-inch pots, cutting off all the tops, and keep the plants cool, say 40 degrees at night. In February wash off the soil and re-pot again in 3½-inch and give more heat. These will make very fine plants for spring use.

The Vinca major is an almost hardy plant; therefore a very cool temperature will do for it in the dark days of winter. With the increased light of spring give it more heat and then it is that the useful, strong growth is made. We find Vinca Harrisonii almost as useful as the variegated variety and rather easier to get to make a strong growth inside. Give the vinca the fullest light when in active growth. If stood on a bench, as we do geraniums or coleus, the plants would smother each other in April and May, so after the shift from a 2-inch to a 3-inch we set a single row along the edge of the benches, where they can droop over and fully develop their growths. THE WESTERN FAIR.

One of the first things which impress eastern visitors to the Lewis and Clark exposition at Portland, Ore., is the natural beauty of the grounds, enhanced largely by the landscape architects' work. The site is on a "bench" of rolling land, back of which rise the foothills of the Coast mountains and in front of which lies the water of a 200-acre lake.

Entering at the main entrance, the visitor first encounters Columbia court, consisting of two wide avenues between which are spacious sunken gardens, with fountains and beds of summer flowering plants. Beyond Columbia court is the Grand Stairway, leading down Lakeside Terrace to the shore of the lake. Off to the left is Centennial park, a grove of dogwood trees which were left undisturbed when the grounds were being improved and which provide rest and shade for many foot-weary sight-seers.

One of the features of the exposition is the immense planting of roses. There are upwards of 15,000 of them, including many sorts too tender for cultivation in the east. During the past two months several large beds of Mme. Caroline Testout which flank each side of the Grand Stairway have made a grand display. Pruned severely last winter, they have made a growth of four to five feet and will flower all summer. This variety is without an equal for cultivation on the Pacific Coast. It has superseded that famous old sort, La France, which was very popular for more than a score of years. Other varieties which are showing up well at the exposition are Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, Ulrich Brunner, Liberty, Maman Cochet, Marie Van Houtte and Viscountess Folkestone.

There are no trade exhibits of bedding plants on the grounds, the administration having provided everything in that line. Several Portland florists made quite a "clean-up" by disposing of large lots of bedding plants for that purpose. In fact, there was an unprecedented demand from all quarters for bedding plants during the past season, and it was with difficulty that late planters were supplied.

We expect to be favored with the visits of a large number of members of the craft during the exposition season. Among those who made their presence known during the past week were Charles Malmo, Seattle; C. N. Sandahl, Seattle; S. L. Harper, Tacoma; W. L. Porter, Ogden, Utah; C. W. Howard, of the Chase Rose Co., Riverside, Cal.

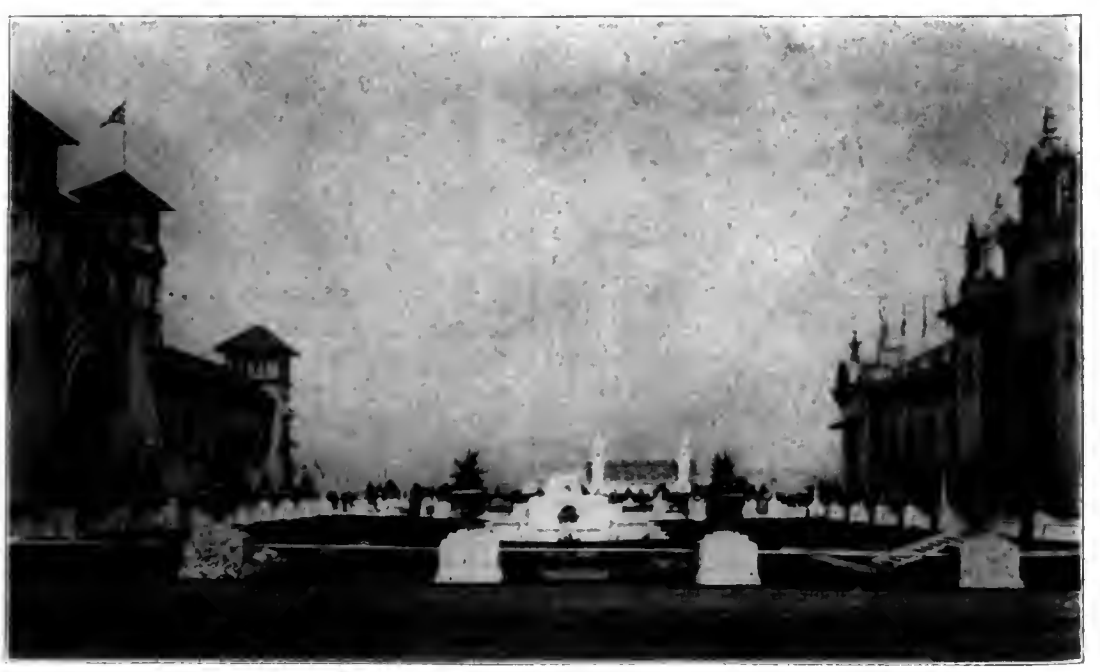
VARIOUS QUERIES.

1. Can Shasta daisies be forced for winter blooming and at what temperature?

2. Will lime water used to kill angle worms in soil injure begonias and ferns?



3. What white flowers, aside from carnations, that are profuse bloomers can be raised in a house piped for 55 degrees?

4. From reports received, do you think acetylene gas adapted to greenhouse use and would you advise its use all night or only part of the night? E. L. K.

1. From observation of a large lot of Shasta daisies lifted from the open ground last fall and put on a light bench, just as we do carnations, they did not flower the whole winter or until late in the spring and that certainly did pay. The night temperature was about 50 degrees and hence I do think this beautiful daisy a profitable winter crop.

2. Lime water will do no harm to the ferns nor to the begonias in the quantity you need to apply to get rid of the angleworms.

3. This is a large question. There is nothing that will equal carnations for persistent blooming in the winter. That is why carnations are so universally grown. If this were the day of short-stemmed flowers several things could be suggested. A night temperature of 55 degrees will grow fine white roses. Ivory will give you almost as many buds as the largest varieties of carnations. Years ago we grew the old double white primula, now seldom seen. We also grew successive crops of white ten weeks' stocks. It was a dwarf, early flowering strain, the seed of which we saved. Our first sowing was the middle of August. It has disappeared entirely. There are several things which could be grown in the genial temperature of 55 degrees. A crop of sweet stevia up to New Year's; Bermuda lilies from January on, also flats or pots of freesias, but I can think of nothing that will give you continuous bloom from November to May equal to the carnation.

Flower Vases are Made Good Use of at the Portland Fair.

Beds of Rose Mme. Caroline Testout at the Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Ore.

4. We know of no reason at all why acetylene gas light should be harmful to plant life. It comes the nearest to daylight of any artificial light we know of. It makes the electric light look a dull red and will be more and more used as people get over the fallacy that it is dangerous. It is generally admitted that plants cannot remain healthy and vigorous under continuous light. You could slightly advance the flowering of lilies or any crop you wished to force, and where worthless afterwards, but it will not do for roses or carnations or any plants that we wish to keep in vigorous health. When the sun goes down let the plants rest.

A CASE OF DISTRESS.

The REVIEW is in receipt of the following letter accompanied by letters from the county clerk and sheriff at Leavenworth, Kan., indicating that the facts are as stated:

With a heavy heart, and only for the sake of my family, I ask you respectfully if you maybe would do something through your paper so I would be able to repair my greenhouses before fall. I had a fire in the month of February and lost about $800 in plants. I rebuilt and restocked it again, and in the month of May the hail not only wrecked the greenhouses but destroyed the contents and left me without anything. Please excuse me; it is a terrible thing to ask for help, but it is for the sake of my family. My wife is an invalid for two years. C. W. KLINE.

TOMATOES.

Young plants now under way should not be neglected in the matter of moving up. A good deal has been said regarding the having of tomato plants too strong, claims being made that it gives them a tendency to develop overabundant foliage to the detriment of the fruit producing properties. When the fruiting stage is reached there is no doubt danger from this source, but in the earlier stages of growth I believe the best results are afterwards obtained by growing the plants on as freely as possible; it is time enough to begin the hardening up process after the plants are set in their fruiting quarters, which is best done by limiting the amount of soil for the individual plant. In the meantime, however, keep the plants potted on just as soon as the pots are well filled with roots and before they begin to show any signs of becoming drawn or spindly through lack of freedom at the roots.

Of course the soil need not be overrich. Any good potting soil will be strong enough; the principal thing is room and soil enough for the roots to run freely in. If this is supplied, healthy, short-pointed plants will be the result and such plants will begin to flower and set fruit a good deal earlier than plants that have become drawn and spindly through neglect from any of the many causes which produce such conditions. It stands to reason that it takes a plant built on a good, healthy foundation to withstand, and prove fruitful, the artificial conditions to which they are subjected during their after life.

Another important agency in the production of healthy plants is abundance of light and air. At this season of the year there should be little trouble in supplying both, as the ventilators can be left open, both night and day, with little danger from the attacks of mildew or other fungous diseases. But the plants should be set well apart, so that every individual will have freedom of air and full exposure to light on all sides.

Care should be exercised as the nights get colder to regulate the air so as to give as equal a temperature as possible. For instance, should the temperature run naturally, with the ventilators open, as high as from 70 to 75 degrees one week and next, in the case of a cold spell, run 10 degrees lower, the ventilators should be lowered so as to maintain a temperature of about 70 degrees. To do this it may be necessary to close down gradually early enough in the afternoon to concentrate enough sun heat to sustain the desired temperature. Fire heat should not be used until it is absolutely necessary. The longer it can be delayed the better for the plants, but it is advisable to use it should there be a danger of the temperature of the house running below 60 degrees.

The plants will require a moderate supply of water at the roots, but no syringing, and as little atmospheric moisture during the night as possible. Through the day it is sometimes advantageous to damp the floor of the house to help lower the temperature on bright, scorching days. W. S. CROYDON.

TO EXTERMINATE ANTS.

To drive out the common black ants which may be infesting any flower beds or other places I should use tar or a solution of it. Not gas tar, but just common pine tar. Gas tar is fatal to plant life. One must use judgment mixed with his tar. If the ants swarm all over the place, of course, heroic treatment must be resorted to, but in ordinary cases, where the ants are in the ground occupied by colens and other tender stock, that is another story. Were I to handle such a job, unless the ants were killing the plants I would not do a thing to them now, but when frost has come and got in its work on the plants so that the ground is clear, then I would just soak it with a solution of tar or say two ounces of pine tar to twelve quarts of hot rain water and give at least two applications.

Edward Snow.

SAVES PROFANITY.

Once upon a time ex-President Grover Cleveland went on record as of the belief that if, when a member of the great brotherhood of fishermen loses from his hook a particularly likely specimen, his expression of pent up feeling is a well-modulated, if clearly enunciated, "damn," it is not written down against him. Now, surely, if the fisherman has exemptions, so, too, has the greenhouse man who suffered all winter with leaky pipe-joints and who now, in order to repair the difficulty, undertakes to take down his piping and finds some of the joints rusted fast. If profanity be permitted to the exasperated fisherman on the shady bank of the babbling brook it could not be withheld from the perspiring man wrestling with the obdurate pipe beneath the greenhouse bench.

But while it may be necessary for the fisherman to plead his exemptions, it is not so with the florist, for if he reads the advertising columns of the Review, as all good florists do, he will know that there is means at hand for putting an end to exasperation and inclination to profanity. In fact, with the pipe-joint fillers now offered joints on which it is used will always be tight and still, after many years, will come apart with perfect ease. The expense is so small, the trouble so slight, with the certainty of tight joints which will come apart when wanted, that it is no wonder that the manufacturers find the greenhouse trade, next to the plumbers, worth most to them.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Benching Young Stock.

Just now most carnation growers are busily engaged in replanting their houses, or at least refilling the benches preparatory to replanting. If you started this laborious operation when the plants began to be unprofitable you may have all your beds refilled ready to plant, and you were wise in going at it early. We have a few beds that were filled a month ago, but we also have many that have paid us well right up to now. No further delay must be allowed, however, as every day's delay after August 15 we consider a loss to the next season's crop. The demand for high grade carnations comes just as soon as carnations are ready and, in fact, good carnations are always in demand. So do not delay any longer, but get your houses refilled and, if possible, replant the first week in August or, if your plants are in good order, plant any time now.

When I say if your plants are in good order I do not mean if they are large. Large plants are not always the best to plant, just as large blooms are not always the best to buy for commercial use. A large, soft plant should always be avoided at planting time. We do not object so much to the size as we do to the softness, but extremely large plants this early are very apt to be soft unless they were planted out of large pots in the spring. What I mean when I say in good order is a nice, bushy plant that has been topped at least the second time and which has had enough dry weather to make the growth sound and firm. I would rather plant a carnation that was dug out of dust dry soil than one that had been continuously moist and made a recent rapid growth. Providing, of course, that the soil is such as will crumble readily in digging up the plants. That is why a rather sandy soil is the best for planting carnations on outdoors; you can get all the roots when digging the plants. If your soil gets lumpy when it gets dry you would better wait for a rain and then dig the plants before they start into a new growth again. The idea is to have the plants in that half dormant condition as they will get in midsummer when it is quite dry, and then to get the roots without breaking too many.

Every grower knows that the best time to transplant or repot any plant is when it is just a little hardened off as a result of withholding water or some such check to the growth, and that a plant in such condition will take hold much quicker and suffer much less than when it is in full growth and full of sap. The carnation is no exception to this rule. When taken from a dry field and planted into moist soil the roots at once become active and take hold of the new soil and the plants start into a new growth. There is little or no wilting, because the foliage is hard and the atmosphere in the house is so much more moist than outside during dry weather. Less shading is required, too, when the conditions are such as I have recommended, but we do like a little shade for a few days to help keep the temperature down and the atmosphere from drying out too quickly.

We used to practice dipping the plants into a pail of water when digging, but we have come to doubt the wisdom of this, when the ground is dry and the plants are to be planted at once. So we planted a bed of Lawson last week without dipping and they are taking hold finely so far. It is surprising how quickly a plant will respond to the effects of moisture when it is dry and I think it is better to let the plant draw its first moisture from the new soil rather than to saturate it before planting. New rootlets will form over night and the plant is soon in condition to supply itself by means of its roots if it is given a fair chance. The soil should not be wet but only moist, and syringing should be light but frequent. The walks and every place the sun strikes direct should be wet down to help keep the atmosphere moist. Of course, the plants must be kept covered closely to keep the sun and wind from them until they are planted, so the roots will not dry too much, and, in fact, they should be out of the soil just as short a time as possible.

If you have beds that were filled some time ago and that are quite dry begin watering them two or three days before you want to plant them, as it will take several waterings to wet the soil clear to the bottom and no bed should ever be planted with the bottom of the soil dry. It will take about a day for most soils to get into proper shape for planting after the last watering. It should be moist, but not too moist to crumble nicely when rubbed through the fingers, just about the way you like it for potting. You cannot be too particular in having your soil just right, because if it is too dry it will draw the moisture from the roots and wilt the plants, and it will take a heavy soaking to wet it through, just what you want to avoid at planting time. On the other hand, if the soil is too wet it will pack and become stiff and will remain in that condition a long time, a bad thing for the plants.

As to the distance between the plants each way, that will vary somewhat, to fit the beds, etc. Some of our beds will hold seven rows across, while others will hold only six, but we usually plant from ten to twelve inches apart, according to circumstances. Some varieties will need more room to the plant than others. Heavy growing varieties, of course, take up more room than the wiry ones, and they are injured quicker from overcrowding than the slender ones. Don't think that because you put your plants close together that you will have big crops of fine blooms. Two years ago a grower who was new on carnations did this against our advice, thinking that he could put the size on them by feeding. But he found out his mistake and last fall he told us of his failure to produce quality. It takes a strong shoot to produce a large bloom and a strong stem, and it takes room and air and light to produce strong shoots. If we were to grow for quality alone I would plant such varieties as Lawson and Enchantress fifteen inches apart and I am not sure but that it would pay any way if we could just make up our mind to it.

Don't plant much closer than customary if your plants happen to be small. You will be surprised to see how quickly they will spread out, and by spring they will be sure to need the room. Also don't delay planting because your plants happen to be undersized. They will grow faster in the house than they will outdoors, especially if the weather continues dry, and if it turns in wet the plants will get soft and it will be difficult for you to follow the above procedure.

THE WASHINGTON PROGRAM.

The preliminary program has been issued for the S. A. F. convention at Washington August 15 to 18. The opening session will be called to order at 2 p. m. on Tuesday. The address of welcome will follow, then the annual address of the president, reports of secretary, treasurer, state vice-presidents, committees, etc.

At the close of the opening session the judges will examine and prepare a report on the novelties and new inventions in the trade display.

The president's reception will be held at 7:30 Tuesday evening under the auspices of the Washington Florists' Club.

At 9:30 Wednesday morning the judges will report and the prize essays on "The Ideal Employer" will be read and awards announced.

Selection of next meeting place, nominations of officers and roll-call of states for vice-presidents will follow.

A lecture on the work of the Bureau of Plant Industry will be given by B. T. Galloway, chief, illustrated with the stereopticon.

The bowling tournament will take place at the corner of Eighth and E streets at 2 p. m.

At 8 p. m. Miss Susan B. Sipe will lecture on "The Work of the Bureau of Plant Industry in Encouraging Civic Improvement and the Teaching of Horticulture in the Public Schools," illustrated with the stereopticon.

The question box will be opened after the lecture and is known to contain some interesting subjects, including plants worthy of more general use as summer bedders; handling carnations between time of cutting and marketing; effect of cold storage in retarding peony bloom; should the S. A. F. have a winter meeting?

At 9:30 Thursday morning discussion is invited on "Helps to Floriculture in the South and Southwest" and "The Feasibility of Preparing a Textbook of Horticulture for Dissemination by Florists' Clubs."

At 10 a. m. polls open for the election of officers.

The question box will be open during the election. Among the questions already suggested is: "Should this society countenance the substitution of popular appellations for cumbersome and often unpronounceable foreign names of new plant introductions?"

The Florists' Hail Association will hold its annual meeting at 2 p. m. and the Carnation Society will meet at 4 p. m.

At 8 p. m. Oglesby Paul, of Philadelphia, will lecture on "The Ideal Country Home for the Man with a Long Head and a Short Purse," illustrated by the stereopticon.

On Friday the society will be in the hands of the Washington Florists' Club.

The sessions will be held at Carroll Hall, on G street between Ninth and Tenth streets. The trade exhibition will be staged next door, in the National Rifles' Armory. A special display by the U. S. Department of Agriculture will be made in Carroll Hall.

Convention Preparations.

Convention matters are now well in hand, the program is about laid out and ample provision has been made for a celebration, on our twenty-first birthday, such as has never been excelled and seldom equaled.

I have lived in Washington some thirty odd years, and have never seen it finer than at present. From the time that the visiting florists and their ladies reach Washington, until they take the train or boat for home, we hope to keep every moment of their time pleasantly and profitably occupied. A few of the events that will be on the program may here be enumerated:

There will be carriage and automobile rides for the ladies, about the city proper and through the world-famed Rock Creek park, luncheon to be served enroute; reception and entertainment in the Library of Congress, the finest building on earth, from the cafe of which one of the most magnificent views imaginable may be had of the city of Washington, The Soldiers' Home in the distance, Naval Observatory, the beautiful placid waters of the Potomac river, the historic city of Alexandria, the magnificent Virginia hills, the world-famed Arlington national cemetery, the old Lee estate, Fort Meyer, and a hundred interesting pictures too numerous to mention, may be seen from the portico of this magnificent cafe. We are also promised a band concert by the Marine band of seventy pieces.

Bowling, as usual, will be taken care of in the most up-to-date manner. Numerous valuable prizes to be contested for are already in hand, both for ladies and gentlemen, and the superintendent of the commissary has promised that no one taking part in these pleasurable exercises shall go hungry or thirsty while thus engaged.

The gentleman in charge of the shooting contest has given us the assurance that nothing will be lacking to make this an eventful afternoon for all those who may take part in it, and those who accompany them. The grounds of the Analostan Gun Club have been secured for this occasion. They are most favorably situated within twenty minutes of Convention hall, easily accessible by a car system second to none in the United States. Z. D. Blackistone will have charge of this event, which alone should be enough to assure success.

Special arrangements have been made in the various departments of the United States government to show particular attention to all members wearing the S. A. F. badge, so in whatever department one may be interested, he may rest assured everything will be done to impart information.

The United States Propagating Gardens have many new and interesting plants. Special guides will be in attendance to show and explain their method of greenhouse building, and the planting and growing of flowers will be thoroughly explained. The White House greenhouses adjoining are also very interesting. At the Department of Agriculture there will be enough to keep those interested busy for weeks.

Many other places are also to be found very interesting, and I will say that everyone interested in the flower business will find it much to his advantage to be present at the Washington convention, with the assurance from the Washington florists that they can go home and feel that whatever cost may have been incurred by their attendance was money and time well spent.

On Friday evening, July 14, we were favored by a visit by that ever popular and much loved "Phil" Hauswirth of, I should say Chicago, but will say, United States, because our society is national, and wherever good can be accomplished for the society, Phil can be counted upon for his assistance in making the event a success. W. F. Gude.

In order to facilitate the management in their arrangements for the entertainment of the visitors to the S. A. F. convention it is respectively requested—

First—That all ladies contemplating coming will send in at once their names to Mrs. Joseph R. Freeman, chairman ladies' entertainment committee.

Second—That all teams or individuals wishing to enter the bowling contest will send in their names to William H. Ernest, Station M, Washington, D. C., chairman committee on bowling.

Third—That ladies wishing to enter the ladies' bowling contest will send in names to F. H. Kramer.

Fourth—That all wishing to enter the shooting contest will send names to Z. D. Blackistone, Fourteenth and H streets, chairman committee on shooting.

Z. D. Blackistone.

Various Notes.

Practically all business at present is at a standstill, with the exception of funeral work, which has been fairly plentiful.

Committees all around report progress. There will be a meeting tonight to settle up all affairs and get the official program to date, but too late for the press, and as the writer would rather wait for definite information, will in next issue give all the news of the S. A. F. in detail. The boys all around can gamble on a good time. As per promise.

CARE OF YOUNG STOCK.

The care of young stock during the next few weeks should occupy the biggest part of the time, as any neglect in cultivating, tying, disbudding, syringing or ventilating at this season is certain to cause such damage to the young stock that, however well we may treat them afterwards, we will never recover the ground lost. Too much importance cannot be attached to cultivation and this should be persisted in until the feeding roots begin to approach the surface of the soil, when further cultivation would be injurious.

In soils which are deficient in calcareous matter, and most rose soils are, a sprinkling of air-slaked lime on the soil previous to stirring will help to strengthen the stem and give tone to the foliage.

Ventilation will require to be carefully attended to and especially at night, when, with sudden fluctuations in the temperature, any laxity in the proper administration of air may nullify all our work and efforts during the day.

As the nights begin to cool it is well to have our heating apparatus in good order, so that we can with safety fire up on short notice and, as we may soon expect the outside temperature to fall below 60 degrees, when firing becomes a necessity, it is better to be prepared for just such emergencies.

Tying and training should now be practiced without intermission if we wish to get the bushes into good shape before the first crop matures. By allowing the young shoots to trail all over the bench we are inviting the eyes to break weak, which is sure to encourage a luxuriant crop of blind wood and, as one of my correspondents remarked, "blind wood does not pay."

By keeping the shoots tied neatly to the supports syringing is made easy and effective and it also allows free access of the sun's rays to the soil and gives opportunity for a free circulation of air among the foliage, keeps the leaves hard and crisp and of good texture.

Disbudding should also be attended to regularly and carefully, not merely nipping off the bud, as is still practiced by some growers, but by carefully selecting the eye which is likely to produce a good cane, thus securing good, robust wood with eyes fit to develop future flowering stems.

Our insect enemies also must be looked after, as they reproduce so rapidly at this season that carelessness on this matter, even for one week, may cost weeks of labor and worry to overcome them. Mildew should be carefully kept in check. A frequent use of the sulphur blower will effect this and by using the preventives of fresh air and a moderately dry atmosphere this pest should give us little trouble. RIBES.

A DOUBLE CATTLEYA.

The accompanying engraving is reproduced from a photograph of a double flower of Cattleya labiata produced by a plant in the collection of J. P. Parker, Santa Cruz, Cal. Even the rostellum and pollen mass were doubled in this flower. It seems to have been almost a complete merging of two flowers into one.

CHRISTMAS BELLS.

Last season it was predicted that the sale of Christmas bells, particularly of the folding variety, was at its height and that another year would see a decline in the business done with this popular specialty, but B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., says the prediction is a long way from coming true. He reports everybody buying Christmas bells in fully as large, if not greater, quantities as a year ago. In some towns he finds the retail florists reluctant to handle the folding paper bell because last year the department stores cut into the trade with a cheaper article than is required for a first-class flower store. In such places the florists buy the immortelle bell. This is of red immortelles glued upon a papier mache frame and is selling in good quantities, particularly to the better grade of flower stores. It is not handled by department or other stores.

MASSACHUSETTS GARDENERS.

Lenox.

If any evidence were needed of the steady increase in the number of private gardening establishments in Massachusetts, it is only necessary to visit one of the recognized horticultural centers, such as Brookline, the North Shore, or Lenox, and it will become at once apparent that there has been a truly wonderful development of late years. A large proportion of the newer estates are of greater acreage and contain more greenhouses than the older ones. Some have developed the Italian gardening fad to the best point it has yet reached, but by far the largest proportion favor a more natural style, which allows of the use of large masses of hardy herbaceous plants and annuals for color effects. Little of the old time bedding is seen; carpet beds are practically gone, and cannas, geraniums, etc., are hardly seen in beds at all. Geraniums are largely used in window boxes, however, as are a miscellaneous assortment of other plants. Large and well kept lawns are perhaps the best feature on the newer estates, motor lawn mowers displacing horse mowers in some instances, being, it is claimed, more economical. Better care is taken each succeeding year of trees and shrubs, as tree surgery becomes understood more, and insect pests are combated at every turn. The old-time plan of crowding trees, shrubs and beds all over the lawns is giving place to more rational ideas, which seem to increase the size of the estates by opening up pretty vistas which were previously hidden by a miscellaneous mixture of trees and shrubs, which were usually too thickly planted, never trimmed or, often trimmed with topiary precision to give room for pedestrians.

Lenox is one of the most interesting horticultural centers to visit in summer or fall. Of course it is not devoid of attraction in winter, but to be seen at its best July or October are good months to visit it. The tints on the forest trees at the later date make it the Mecca for many visitors. Located, as the various estates are, on high hills, with large stretches of lawns, running up to 100 acres each in area, and commanding extensive views of mountain, lake and forest scenery on all sides, the outlooks are magnificent and one tears himself away with regret from many of them.

Time did not permit of us visiting all the estates. With a temperature of over 90 degrees in the shade, such as we experienced in mid-July, some of the stamina is naturally taken from one, so we were unable to call on E. J. Norman, on the extensive Westinghouse estate, S. Carlquist, P. J. Donahue and some others whom we hope to see in the near future.

G. H. Morgan.

Our first call was on the veteran John Dallas, at the G. H. Morgan estate. We found him busy haymaking with a gang of men, but he gave us a cordial welcome. This is a fine old estate. Some seventeen acres are laid out and planted with great taste. Numerous fine specimen trees were noted, both deciduous and coniferæ. Cordon trained apples, pears, plums, gooseberries and currants were growing in the kitchen garden. Two peach houses were carrying fine crops of handsome fruit, Alexander Noblesse being especially good. Chrysanthemums were in fine shape, being four to five feet high and very sturdy. Some good seedling carnations were seen in bloom.

Enchantress is the best standard variety grown. A batch of Eucharis Amazonica in pots looked remarkably well. It had just given 175 spikes of bloom. Crotons, palms, orchids and a miscellaneous assortment of plants for furnishing are grown.

John Sloane.

One of the best kept of the Lenox estates is that of John Sloane, where A. J. Loveless is the presiding horticultural genius. There are a fine lot of greenhouses here, all quite modern. In roses Beauty, Richmond, Liberty, Bride and Maid were noted. Carnations are all grown inside and were coming along well. Melons filled several divisions, Sutton's English sorts being grown. Cattleyas have two houses. Some fine masses of C. labiata, Trianæ, gigas, etc., were noted. One house is devoted to cypripediums, quite a number of interesting seedlings being included. Nectarines and peaches filled two houses. Fruit was of very good quality. Chrysanthemums grown to single stems are here, as elsewhere in Lenox, grown in boxes, better results being obtained by this method than by bench culture. All the newest and best sorts are grown. Stems were five to seven feet high and should give some splendid exhibition blooms.

Palms, caladiums, crotons, dracænas, etc., are grown in considerable numbers. A north house contained a batch of 500 odontoglossums, the only ones seen in Lenox. Oncidium varicosum Rogersii, Vanda cærulea, dendrobiums and a few other serviceable sorts of orchids are grown. In the flower garden such plants as Phlox Drummondii, Petunia Bar Harbor Beauty, Lobelia tenuior, Japanese iris, clarkias and other annuals and perennials made a fine show. In the rose garden, recently made, a bed of Gruss an Teplitz proved the merits of this variety as a summer bedder. The so-called Baby Rambler looked wretched by comparison, being of a washed-out color and apparently more of a prey to red spider than any other rose. Crimson Rambler on arches made a fine showing, being followed by Clematis paniculata later. Numerous window boxes were filled with double Grant geraniums and variegated vincas.

Girard Foster.

Bellefontaine, the fine estate where E. Jenkins has charge, is always in the forefront at the Lenox shows and a big proportion of first premiums each year attest the quality of the stock grown here. Chrysanthemums were of grand quality and the walking-sticklike shoots should produce some superb blooms. Bordeaux mixture is found helpful in checking fungoid growths on the foliage. A house of Kaiserin and Carnot roses were of first-class quality. One large house was filled with palms and various other furnishing plants. Campanula pyramidalis is grown in quantity in pots for late summer piazza use. Nicotiana Sanderæ had been used in considerable numbers. We did not admire it. The colors seemed harsh. A number of well flowered plants in 8-inch and 9-inch pots of Carrie, Polly and other early chrysanthemums were noted on the piazzas and were quite effective.

Crotons, dracænas and other furnishing plants were very well grown in frames. Tuberous begonias, achimines and Campanula Isophylla are used freely for house decoration. Only a few orchids are grown. Nectarines and peaches occupy one house and grapes another. The last named is alone worth a trip to Lenox to see. The bunches of Black Hamburg would in some cases tip the scales at seven to eight pounds each, color, bloom and general finish perfect. Muscat of Alexandria, Gros Colmar and Gros Maræ were equally good. Mr. Jenkins is certainly an adept at grape culture. A fine lot of figs in pots were fruiting heavily. Bay trees are used in considerable numbers around the mansion. A pond of nymphæas containing several of the tender varieties was also very attractive.

Other Lenox estates will be written of next week. W. N. C.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions have been materially improved since our last report. Receipts are very much lessened and for good stock there has been a very fair demand. There is not a heavy call for Beauties, but for good Brides, Maids and Kaiserins purchasers are readily found. The number of really good roses coming in is, however, small. This is not surprising after such a torrid wave as we have experienced. Carnations are mostly very small. A few are now coming in from outdoors. Some large growers are not sending in any at all now, all efforts being concentrated in preparations for housing new crops. Sweet peas are selling much better, but the heat and drought have made them very short-stemmed. The best are bringing 25 cents per hundred.

Quite a few outdoor gladioli are coming in. These sell fairly well and are used freely by the stores for window decorations. Lilium auratum comes from a few growers, but is not a very good seller, its heavy odor being considered objectionable. Achillea ptarmica The Pearl, herbaceous phloxes and asters in several colors are seen, but do not appear to be in much demand, the first named selling perhaps the best. Good, white asters should be in demand from now on, as carnations are very small.

The Exhibition.

Following the protracted heat wave the exhibition at Horticultural Hall on July 22 was smaller than usual. The Harvard Botanic Gardens, Robert Cameron, gardener, had a fine tank of aquatics, including Victoria regia, also a capital display of well grown achimines. T. C. Thurlow & Son and H. A. Stevens Co. made large displays of named herbaceous phloxes in all the leading sorts. L. M. Towle had a collection of thirty-eight varieties of sweet peas and A. E. Hartshorn a table of fine hollyhocks and petunias. Mrs. A. W. Blake had a specimen plant of Nicotiana Sanderæ and Mrs. E. M. Gill a general display. For collection of native ferns Miss Isabella C. Shattuck and C. C. Kingman took the prizes.

Fruits and vegetables made a fine display, the various classes being well contested. The Boston Mycological Club had an interesting collection of mushrooms, one edible variety being forty-two inches in circumference.

The next exhibition will occur on August 5. There will be weekly shows during the month of August. Perennial plants and phloxes will be special features on August 5.

Florists' Club Picnic.

Pleasant weather favored the long-looked-for picnic at Randolph Grove on July 25, although early indications were not very promising. The attendance was very satisfactory and everyone seemed to spend a most enjoyable day. The greatest interest, of course, centered in the sports, which included twenty-four events. Two prizes were given in each class. These included silver cups, umbrellas, fishing rods, meerschaum pipes, gold cuff links, ladies' sashes, clocks, shaving sets, brooches and other valuable and useful articles. Among the donors of these were: A. H. Hews & Co., T. F. Galvin, W. E. Doyle, R. & J. Farquhar & Co., Schlegel & Fottler Co., T. J. Grey & Co., W. W. Rawson & Co., Joseph Breck & Sons, Edward Hatch, Julius Heurlin, F. E. Palmer, James Wheeler, Duncan Finlayson and others. A fuller report will appear in our next letter.

Various Notes.

The Boston Sunday Herald of July 23 contained an interesting illustrated sketch of T. C. Thurlow and his work among peonies.

S. J. Goddard has been quite sick, threatened with typhoid fever. We are glad to report that he is much better.

Ernest Wild, of Braintree, is on a trip to England and hopes to return about September 1.

J. Tailby & Son, of Wellesley, have had a fine display of their new seedling yellow calla, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, in their fields of late.

Farquhar & Co. are offering their new Lilium Philippinense, which secured a gold medal in Boston last year, to the retail trade for immediate delivery.

W. N. Craig.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Charles W. Crouch has sold out his business to his sons, and has gone to England to visit his brother.

Charles L. Baum is tearing down seven old houses and erecting four adjoining the two he erected two years ago, also installing an eighty-horsepower return tubular boiler, which now makes his heating capacity 150 horsepower. The houses are 24x120 feet and are up-to-date in every way. Two of these houses are now planted with 8,000 chrysanthemums for single stems. The remaining two houses are to be planted with carnations next week.

A. H. Dailey reports stock looking well, but has suffered to some extent with stem-rot on his carnations. He is installing a new return tubular boiler.

Business as a whole has been about fifty per cent better than last year.

COLUMBUS, O.

At the last meeting of the Columbus Florists' Club it was voted to send a delegate to Washington, the club to pay his expenses and he to invite the society to meet at Columbus another year. Columbus has excellent advantages as a convention city; in fact, it ranks first in the Union as a convention center.

We have had very unfavorable weather for outside cut flowers, so that sweet peas are out of business since July 4 and asters are not promising.

Carnations in the field are making a fine growth. W.

MECHANICAL WATERING.

The accompanying illustration shows the best photograph yet secured of Louis Wittbold's mechanical watering device, which is just now attracting a great deal of attention and calling many visitors to the George Wittbold establishment in Chicago, where all the houses are equipped with it and where this picture was made. It is difficult to make a photograph which shows the sprinkler in operation, as it throws the water in a very thin sheet which the camera fails to catch. The main pipe is inconspicuous and is placed either on the surface of the bed or on the rafters. The nozzles are three or more feet apart and throw streams so flattened that they unite and make a solid sheet of water. The operator, who appears at the far end in the picture, turns on the water at all nozzles at once by simply throwing a lever; then by means of a swivel he directs the stream where he wants it, from one side of the bed to the other, or as he will. It is possible to wet both sides of the bench and not the middle if so desired and the work can be done very quickly. A place where the sprinkler is especially useful is above a line of plant baskets hung from the roof.

FROM WESTERN PRAIRIES.

I send by this mail a flower I would like named. I found it growing in a rich creek bottom. It is evidently a sunflower. It is a perennial and is a grand plant, both in flower and foliage. The latter is so large and luxuriant, a group of the plants have a tropical effect. It grows readily from seed and is a grand thing, much finer than many of the named varieties of helianthus now grown. It grows six feet high and over. Notice the cup formed by the leaves around the stalk. The cups thus formed by the lower and largest leaves will hold two or three tablespoonsful of water. These leaves are twelve to fourteen inches long and eight to ten inches wide. S. J. G.

The plant is Silphium perfoliatum, sometimes called the cup plant. There are several other silphiums, S. terebinthinaceum and S. laciniatum being cultivated quite freely in the eastern states. All the members of this genus are natives of the United States. W. N. C.

MENOMINIE, WIS.—Joseph Wolf is removing his greenhouses to this place, from Sparta, Wis. He will have two houses 18x100 and has good prospects for business.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The past week was perhaps the dullest of the season. Business is quiet all over the city. Even the occasional funeral order was lost sight of last week. The death rate is very small and we can console ourselves that we have a healthy city. The retailers and wholesalers are having easy times just now. The growers, on the other hand, are very busy dumping old stock, replanting, building and painting. The stock that is coming to the commission men each morning is only fair; fancy is limited in all varieties.

Asters are coming in quite heavily, the bulk of them very good. White and purple seem to sell the best. As they are good keepers, the stores are buying quite heavily.

In roses the supply is good, also in quality. Miss Belle Miller, of Springfield, has about the best that come to this market. Carnations sell well when fancy. Of these only a limited number come in. Sweet peas are very poor and sell slowly. Tuberose stalks sell fairly well. Gladioli are becoming a glut at $3 per hundred. Other outdoor stock sells slowly.

Club Outing.

Had Mr. J. Pluvius behaved on July 20, the Florists' Club would have had a great time. As it was the rain kept many away. The morning party numbered only thirty-five and the afternoon delegation about as many. Those who came had a fine time, thanks to the arrangements of our trustees. Mellenbrock's Grove is situated on the east side and a better location for a good time could not be found. A strange coincidence was the absence of all the officers, as neither President Juengel, Vice-president Pilcher, Secretary Schray, nor Treasurer Meinhardt could be found on the grounds. Messrs. Guy, Ammann and Fillmore did their work well. The games, which took place in the dancing pavilion on account of the wet grounds, and the big fish fry were the features of the day. The first event was a nail-driving contest in which twelve young ladies took part and furnished lots of sport for the crowd. Miss Reeb, who came with Arthur Jablonsky, was declared the winner.

The next event created much amusement among the growers, a pot-breaking contest. This was for married ladies only. There were about fifteen entries and Mrs. Braun, wife of Foreman Braun, at Jablonsky's, proved the best pot-breaker, Mrs. Klockenkemper coming in second. The race for boys under 12 years was won by Phoenix Jablonsky; for boys of 14, by John Bentzen; young men's race, by Arthur Jablonsky; little girl's race, Angie Ammann; girls of 12, Alice Music. The rain had let up a little and the younger folks indulged in dancing, boating, bowling and other amuseements, of which there were plenty of all kinds on the grounds.

Picnic Notes.

Fred Ammann was here, there and everywhere and saw that Edwardsville's record for hospitality was sustained.

When Chairman Guy called for volunteers during lunch hour, your correspondent was the first man over the fence. Another record for us.

A voice calling for help in the evening near the lake proved to be that of "Bill" Adels. He was quickly pulled out.

Rude Windt, the official photographer, was on hand but the rain spoiled his plans.

Henry Emunds was the biggest man on the grounds. John Steidel, the pride of Central, was Mr. Emunds' physical opposite.

Frank Fillmore's undress uniform looked cool and comfortable whether he really was or not.

Henry Lohrenz and A. G. Bentzen are now regularly affiliated bowling bugs.

As the last of the crowd was leaving the grounds the sweet singers got busy and some one turned in a riot call.

We were glad to see our old friend, Julius Koenig. He was once a prominent member of the club and may be again.

George Angermueller "stuck for the big show" but passed up the flying Dutchman.

Fred and Herman Weber looked lost without mamma and papa, but then the old folks are on the other side of the big pond.

Various Notes.

W. J. Pilcher, the well known grower at Kirkwood, has formed a partnership with E. Burrows, to be knows as Pilcher & Burrows, brokers in florists' supplies, with offices at 717 North Fourth street. They expect to do a large trade over a wide section of the country, buying or selling anything a florist uses.

John Kalisch has returned from his trip to Portland and speaks highly of the exposition. Ed Kalisch, his brother, and wife will leave next week for an extended trip east by the way of Buffalo and will meet the St. Louis delegation at Washington.

Henry Lohrenz is building a handsome new show house and store near his old place, which will be furnished by September 1. He says the boys can look for a house-warming.

Fred Alves, at Angermueller's, will take a week's vacation and be back in time to let Mr. Angermueller off to attend the S. A. F. convention.

Emil Schray is building a row of flats near his place, one of which will be occupied by himself, but the first occupants of the flats will be "Fillmore's twins."

Fred Meinhardt is still very busy with cemetery work. He says he will have to catch up with the work so he will not miss the convention.

Miss T. Badaracco will leave soon to spend a month at West Baden Springs, Ind.

W. A. Chalfant, of Springfield, Mo., was in town Friday. Mr. Chalfant left the same night for Chicago and from there he will go north to spend a month on a much needed vacation. He is a member of the St. Louis Florists' Club and called on several of the members.

In conversation with some of the S. A. F. members in St. Louis, they seem to favor St. Paul and Minneapolis for the next meeting place of the society. If the brothers from that place are willing, I am sure that they could rely on the west to help them land the prize. We hear of a little jealous feeling because St. Paul was mentioned in the Bible and Minneapolis was not but this can be overcome when the society meets in 1906. Let's hear from the twins on the subject.

Bowling.

The bowlers had a cool night on Monday and the result was as follows:

Player.	1st	2d	3d	4th	T'l
R. Meinhardt	161	130	163	167	621
J. J. Beneke	141	159	164	148	612

NEW YORK.

The Market.

It was 105 in the shade! Need anything more be said as to the market of last week? New York was not only the biggest but the hottest city in America during the last thirteen days, ending on Friday, when the crest of the hot wave was submerged and we began to breathe again. Deaths and prostrations were many, but we hear of no calamity in the trade and now the reaction is letting us all sit up and take notice again. Saturday and Monday the temperature was most seasonable and life again became worth living.

Shipments of stock are scarce and quality of goods received mostly second and third class. What few Brides, Maids and Beauties of good quality reach the market are snapped up quickly. There seems to be no surplus of anything this week. Even sweet peas were of some account on Monday and some good ones touched $1 a dozen bunches. There were few carnations of any kind offered and even gladioli were not over abundant. As we predicted in our last, the bottom was touched a week ago. The market will drag for a few weeks and then the new life will be infused into everything and we will forget there ever was a flood.

At last lilies have shortened up and their value has increased. They have held on this year with wonderful tenacity. Water lilies are now abundant. The retail windows make a specialty of them, with artificial ponds and fountains. Asters are gathering their forces daily for the expected invasion. It will be another Port Arthur when they come. There can only be one result, a complete surrender.

Various Notes.

The announcement of the generosity of the president of our Florists' Club in providing lemonade for all comers during the hot spell raised the price of lemons on Twenty-eighth street perceptibly. The celebration of the advent of a son and heir may have been a factor in the liquidation.

The prospect for a large attendance from New York at the convention brightens daily. Already nearly fifty have signified their intention of going and dozens are not heard from who will be sure to go. I predict a crowd of 150 from New York and vicinity. A special train is now assured. Great preparations are being made for a gala occasion. Noon, Monday, August 14, is the prospective hour for leaving and arrangements for stop-overs at Baltimore and Philadelphia on the return are a certainty. Secretary Young would be glad to have all who intend to go send him notice at once. The commissary department is in able hands. Mr. Nugent is a liberal host. There will be an abundance of good things for the inner man.

The president of the S. A. F. was in the city on Sunday and Monday on his way to Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Crouch, of Knoxville, Tenn., sailed from New York for England Saturday, July 15.

J. H. Troy, of the Rosary, leaves for his annual European trip the last of August.

W. H. Hughes, with A. T. Boddington, is enjoying his holiday in the Catskills. David A. Dean, with the same house, son of Jas. Dean, is summering with the old folks at home, at Freeport, L. I. Dr. Bunyon has just returned from a fishing trip and the three busy B's, Boddington, Begbie and Bunyard, were up to their eyes in the meshes of a new catalogue and in pansy seed shipments when I called.

Miss Forne, of the New York Cut Flower Co., leaves this week for her home and annual vacation in Canada.

William Ford, of Ford Bros., has had two delightful weeks at Lynn, Mass., and Michael Ford is getting a new coat of tan at Atlantic City.

Saltford has completed the repapering and painting of his store and J. K. Allen is making everything look like new at his headquarters on Twenty-eighth street.

Some fear has been expressed that the bulky exhibits from this vicinity are going to crowd the space at Washington to overflowing. It does look as if there would be nothing to spare when the last one of the displays arrives there.

The New York Bowling Club having dissolved, the men to represent the metropolis will doubtless be chosen on the train and the team will be selected on its merits. Next year, doubtless, the New York Club will have its own bowling facilities and a team in which every member will have an interest.

Everything indicates a great season at Newport. Already the dinner engagements keep the New York branches busy. Everyone reports a multiplicity of bookings and the shipments of good flowers, especially Beauties and orchids, grow daily. The orchid supply was about depleted on Saturday.

A visit to the home of the Telegraph geranium, at Poughkeepsie, last week was enjoyable. In the 100 degrees in the shade temperature I found Thos. De Voy & Son busy preparing for the big storm coming over from the Catskills and breaking the back of the heat wave that even up here in the mountains had become unendurable. The firm has seven houses, over 15,000 square feet altogether, devoted to violets, tomatoes and Telegraph geraniums in rotation, excelling in the quality of each and making all encouragingly profitable. Three houses of tomatoes were especially fine and commanded the highest value in the local market. The violets are all handled by John Young and are of extra quality. Three houses are devoted to the grand cerise bedding geranium, Telegraph. Over 50,000 plants in 2½-inch and 3-inch pots have been handled and the stock is well depleted. Florists will be able to note its splendid color and bedding qualities at the government grounds at Washington. It will stand any ordinary experience, is strong and robust, remarkably brilliant in color and already wonderfully popular. J. Austin Shaw.

PLATYCODONS.

We enclose a leaf and flower from a plant of which we do not know the name. Will you please enlighten us?

A. T. B.

The leaf and flower are from one of the platycodons, which are members of the campanulaceæ family. The variety most frequently seen is P. grandiflorum, also called Campanula grandiflora and Wahlenbergia grandiflora. The common names are balloon flower and Japanese bell flower. The color varies from pure white to purplish blue. In Massachusetts the plant grows two feet high in good soil. There is a dwarfer and rather better form named P. Mariesi, of more recent introduction; it rarely exceeds one foot in height. W. N. C.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Up to Tuesday trade conditions had changed practically not at all since last report. The demand continued very satisfactory to the wholesalers, who report their sales exceeding in money value those of last year, by as much as twenty-five to thirty-five per cent.

Receipts of stock have not greatly increased, so far as roses are concerned. There are a few more Beauties of fair grade, but not enough to seriously impair the value of the best goods. There are a few fair Brides and Maids from old stock, but most of the receipts are now from the fresh plantings and are of the usual quality under the circumstances. The new cut is increasing steadily. There are more carnations, and asters are coming in heavily enough so that the price of both carnations and asters began to weaken on Tuesday. It will not be long before there will be floods of asters.

There are good supplies of auratum lilies which are selling well. Quite a good many Harrisii are seen. Lilium album and rubrum are received in a few houses and sell well. Gladioli are very abundant and make all kinds of prices. Light colored varieties are doing much better than dark, but red sells well because of its usefulness in window displays, etc. Sweet peas are no longer so abundant and what few remain are usually of very poor quality. There continue to be large supplies of "green goods," for which there is little outlet.

Death of L. P. Kelley.

Everyone knew Larry Kelley. He had been a familiar figure in the market for many years, at one time having been the manager of the wholesale business of S. B. Winter. At other times he had been in the employ of different wholesalers and at various times had conducted small retail stores on his own account. Lately he had worked for E. C. Amling, to whom on Saturday he sent a note explaining his illness. On Sunday night he died. The cause was congestion of the lungs. He was 34 years of age and leaves a wife and son.

Strike Ended.

The teamsters' strike was brought to an end July 21 by the unconditional surrender of the unions. The strike had lasted for 105 days, but after the first few days did not interfere in the least with the florist business, at least as to shipments, but it cost the general business interests of the city millions of dollars. Since the hostilities ended some of the strikers have their jobs back but are refused permission to wear their union buttons and there are rumors of further trouble.

Dan Branch's New Place.

Last spring Dan Branch, who has been in business for years at Fortieth street and Indiana avenue, opened another store on Fifty-first street near the Alley L. He did a fair trade there from the start and is now engaged in building a range of glass back of the store. He put up a brick boiler shed and has built two houses, each 30x125, and three smaller houses, about 20x60. He will use these for bedding plants, palms, ferns, chrysanthemums and carnations. The location is a good one for a general retail trade and there is no competition near.

The Horticultural Council.

During the World's Fair flower show a movement was set on foot to organize a National Council of Horticulture, a committee of seven being appointed to prepare a plan of organization. Prof. L. H. Bailey, Prof. L. R. Taft and Prof. H. C. Irish of the committee, were in Chicago last week and a full plan of organization was adopted. The membership will consist of two delegates from each national horticultural society, with nine delegates at large. J. C. Vaughan is chairman of the committee.

Various Notes.

As yet no arrangements have been made as to a route to Washington for the convention, as it looks as though the war between the New York lines may result in something better than the regular fare and one-third rate.

Miss Nellie Moore leaves next week for a trip to Minneapolis and then to Texas.

The Chicago Rose Co., at Libertyville, has one house finished and expects to be all planted up this week.

Growers are busy planting. Most of them are through or nearly through with roses, and J. A. Budlong will finish planting carnations by the end of this week.

F. F. Benthey returned Tuesday from a fishing trip to Diamond Lake.

P. J. Hauswirth will captain Chicago's bowling team at the convention. The others entitled by their averages to

The Hinsdale Golf Club last week concluded a novel handicap in which the contestants could play any nine holes of the eighteen. O. P. Bassett was the winner. In another Hinsdale tournament E. B. Washburn, son of C. L. Washburn, won in the semi-finals.

Fred Weber feels very well satisfied with the outcome of his season. His place was newly built last year and he did not get the start expected in the winter, but the other fellows had big crops. As a result, Beauty prices were never lower. Mr. Weber has had a splendid cut for the last few weeks when prices have been the best known for summer, and expects it will carry him some little time longer, after which he will dry off his plants and start at growing a Christmas crop.

Bassett & Washburn are putting in a Martin rocking grate for a trial. If it suits them as well as they expect it to they will equip all the boilers in their big central heating plant with it.

G. H. Pieser, secretary of the Kennicott Bros. Co., has returned from a week with the bass at Fox Lake.

W. E. Lynch, of E. H. Hunt's, and Mr. Bohannon, of Bohannon & Canger, are at Fremont, Mich., with their families.

Both C. W. McKellar and George Reinberg have added materially to their space by the erection of balconies for office purposes.

D. Nicas, the Randolph street retailer, and A. Lange, of Monroe street, are in Europe, one in Greece, the other in Germany, but each spending his spare change for souvenir postal cards to send home to the boys.

Among the recent visitors were W. A. Chalfant, of Springfield, Mo.; Geo. E. Crabb, of Grand Rapids; C. C. Pollworth, of Milwaukee.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Very little business was done the past week, the weather being very hot and dry, very little good stock is seen. Roses are very poor. Some varieties of carnations are in good condition. There is practically no call for anything except funeral bunches and a very few hospital flowers. The greater number of the retailers are putting their stores in shape, remodeling and painting, preparing for the fall trade, which promises to open sooner this year than it has been doing, as several functions of note are booked for the last of August and first part of September. The growers are busy getting everything in trim for the fall and winter trade, fixing up houses and cleaning up generally. The outlook at present is for a strenuous season, judging by the number of society events listed.

Various Notes.

The Owl Floral Co., James Papadakos, proprietor, will open for business next Saturday at 1001½ Walnut street, formerly occupied by Arthur Newell. Mr. Papadakos has been in the business here the past four years in the Owl Drug Co. store. A full line of cut flowers and plants will be carried.

A visit to the establishment of the Rock-Heite Floral Co. shows the successful perseverance of this firm. Starting in a few years ago with a few houses they have built up their business so that now they have one of the finest ranges in this section of the country. The untiring energy of Mr. Rock, coupled with the ability of Mr. Heite have broken down all barriers, until now this firm has taken a leading place in the race in this city of progressive florists.

Mr. Shaeffer, of the Kansas City Floral Co., has flitted up to the northern lakes on his annual vacation and will put in the next three weeks fishing and taking things easy.

Alex Kerr, foreman for E. A. Humfeld, has returned from a two weeks' vacation in Colorado. He looks well and promises to make the rest of us hustle to keep up the coming season.

Miss J. E. Murray reports business as quiet at present, but is getting her share of the business and is satisfied with conditions.

Mr. Wallace, formerly with R. S. Brown & Son, has purchased five acres at Marlborough, a suburb of this city, and will build several houses to be used in raising a general line of stock for this market.

Will Bridgeland has turned his ever ready hands to building these days and is now deeply engaged in rebuilding benches and putting in fall stock.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The feature of this week's market is the increased quantity of asters of good quality in all colors, and of gladioli. Carnations are falling off in numbers, while good sweet peas are difficult to obtain. Roses are about the same as last week. The Newport Beauties handled by the Niessen Co. continue an important factor. The demand has been excellent for July, design work being reinforced by orders from the summer resorts, which are now arriving. Those having good flowers find a ready market for them.

Business Matters.

A meeting largely attended, of the creditors of Robert Kift & Son was held last Friday. Samuel S. Pennock was chosen trustee, with instructions to have the firm's books audited and report to a meeting to be held on Monday, August 7, at 11:30 a. m., at 1416 South Penn square. The outlook is not encouraging.

The creditors of the L. Peacock Co. met in Camden last week and appointed E. A. Flood, W. B. Robinson and Charles A. Green trustees, representing lumber, glass and fertilizer accounts, respectively. The company has given four mortgages aggregating $6,000 on fifty-eight acres of land. The interest due on these mortgages has been paid, but the holder of the second and third mortgages wishes them paid off. It is probable that with careful management the company

John Burton's New Place.

The most progressive florists' paper takes pleasure in giving its readers a brief description of John Burton's new place at Wyndmoor, on the Lonsdale property purchased a little over a year ago. There are six houses, five just completed, all in one range, the sixth remaining from the old place. The five houses run as before stated, 16 degrees east of northeast, are about fifteen feet high at the ridge and seven at the sides, with an angle of between 33 and 34 degrees. They are about 275 feet long and taken all together about 102 feet wide. The new range contains fifteen ground beds and the older house three benches. Of these six houses, four are planted with 10,000 American Beauty roses and two with 5,800 Liberties. The houses are light and strongly built. They have side glass and walks around the outside. The leveling and staking is being done and the boilers are being set. Mr. Burton, his son and employes are to be congratulated on the result of their hard work during the last few months. The Flower Market will distribute the entire produet of this place.

Various Notes.

The Henry F. Michell Co. has received its first importation of Lilium Harrisii in fine shape. Their freesia and California calla lily bulbs are also particularly good this season.

Wm. J. Baker is handling some nice white roses and carnations in assorted colors. I know this is true, for the junior partner says so.

The Leo Niessen Co. is receiving a splendid lot of asters in all colors.

Samuel S. Pennock is handling high grade Kaiserins and valley, also a few orchids.

Edward Reid has nothing to say about what he is handling, from which you may infer he has some hurry-up orders.

COLD STORAGE LILIES.

Can you tell me how much time to allow for the forcing of cold storage longiflorum lilies? They are now in storage and we would like to have them in bloom for Thanksgiving. F. W.

As Thanksgiving does not arrive until November 25, we are liable to have several weeks of cool weather before that and perhaps a few days of sharp weather. I would advise you to allow ten weeks from cold storage. If you should be a week too early there would be no harm done, as it would be easy to hold them at that time of the year. If you are keeping them in your own cold storage or in your town see that they are not kept in too low a temperature. If possible to keep them at 30 degrees that would be ideal, but do not vary much from 3 to 4 degrees below the freezing point. Ten degrees below the freezing point for any length of time would much impair their vitality. W. S.

Duluth, Minn.—Mrs. Horton, of Bassett & Washburn, Chicago, was a recent caller on the trade here while on a vacation trip.

Denison, Tex.—E. Farley reports business good and stock looking well; roses, carnations and ferns in best demand.

Dear Sir:-

As per your request we give our experience with To-Bak-Ine Liquid as a spray for Thrip. We used two tabelspoonful of the liquid to a gallon of water, and found fourteen gallons sufficient for a house of Bridee 25x300 ft. We applied this about two or three days apart, and found it cleaned the Thrip completely out of the house. Since then we have used it in other houses as a spray, and find this method very much better than fumigating, and think we will depend entirely on spraying with To-Bak-Ine Liquid in the future, as it does the work so much better than smoking.

Yours very respectfully,
Bassett & Washburn

Don't Let Thrips Get the Start of You

Too few growers appreciate that the best use for an insecticide is as a preventive. "A stitch in time saves nine." Don't wait until you MUST fumigate. "Do it now" and the blooms you save will a great deal more than pay the cost of KEEPING THE HOUSES CLEAN. : : : : : : : : : :

Write for Booklet "WORDS OF WISDOM," by leading growers, which tells all about To-Bak-Ine Products.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

THE new crimson winter rhubarb is being pushed by English houses. It is a Burbank product.

MANY seedsmen will offer for next season seeds of legumes inoculated with nitrogen-fixing bacteria.

HENRY ECKFORD, the English sweet pea raiser, was recently the recipient of the Victorian medal of honor.

H. M. EARL, of Burpee & Co., who recently returned from a trip to Europe, is now on his way to the Pacific coast.

THE pea crops are weedy and hard to size up. The general opinion is that a short crop will be harvested.

BEANS are doing well considering the adverse conditions at the start. It is too early to give any idea of what the crop will be.

TAKING the reports received from all sections into account, the onion set harvest of 1905 will fall below that of 1904 by one-third.

REPORTS as to business activity in the seed line at present time express confidence in the coming season, with varying statements as to the profit of the season just ended.

A FARMER is suing an English seed house because twenty-two acres of Best of All purple-top swede proved to be a plant which nobody recognized. In spite of the non-warranty the plaintiff claimed that the seedsman was under necessity to supply some sort of swede. The defendant pleaded that true stock was delivered but that it sported or reverted to some valueless type, although all other seed from the same 685-bushel crop came true. The judge withheld his decision in order to study up.

NEBRASKA SEED CROPS.

C. P. Coy & Son, Waterloo, Neb., write as follows under date of July 21:

"Seed crops promise to give good returns, so far as can be foretold at this date. The season is not sufficiently advanced so that satisfactory yields can be considered certain as yet, but the outlook is favorable now, so far as this district is concerned."

The Western Seed & Irrigation Co., Fremont, Neb., writes July 22 as follows:

"While we cannot just at this time give detailed reports, crop conditions, generally speaking, are not as favorable as we could wish, owing to the cold, backward spring, which not only delayed planting but also caused many crops to be replanted, and also on account of damage caused by cutworms and bugs.

"With a few exceptions early and medium varieties of sweet corn promise fair crops, but we do not look for more than half a crop of late sweet corns.

"Cucumbers are looking well and from present indications ought to make a good crop. Musk and watermelons show fair prospect, with few exceptions, but late. Pumpkin and squash are favorable in some instances, while in others we do not look for more than half a crop on account of the cold, wet spring and damage by cutworms and bugs, which in some cases have taken entire crops where the acreage was small.

"We have just had a severe hot spell, which lasted fully a week, and, although the weather has been somewhat cooler for the last three days, we are needing rain badly."

HARRISII LILIES.

A bulb handler of long experience writes from Bermuda that it will be found that bulbs of the true Harrisii are scarce, while there are plenty of the hybrid stock. He reports that, while the acreage was increased little if any this year, the growing season has been a good one and the increase was twenty-five per cent greater than last year. The first shipment of bulbs reached New York July 14 and was an unusually heavy one, consisting of 2,470 cases. The Bermudian is due at New York again July 28 with practically the balance of the crop.

HOLLAND BULB CROPS.

The following crop report is by the correspondent of the Horticultural Trade Journal, written about July 5:

Continued fine and warm weather, intersected with a few, light showers, has marked the month of June, and with an unusual severe thunderstorm on the last day of the month, it may be said to have been the finest of the months we have so far experienced in the present year of 1905.

Bulb lifting is now in full progress, and in fact it may be said that most of the tulips are now out of the grounds causing thousands of hands to be busy at the cleaning and drying of them. As to the crop it must be confessed that this is not as good as was at first anticipated, in fact in many quarters the crop of tulips has turned out to be a very sad disappointment.

The hyacinth crop is now just being lifted, and although good in some quarters, generally speaking it is not likely to be more than only very middling. Nevertheless it is of considerable importance to know that we may expect well cured bulbs, that are sure to produce good flowers.

Crocus crops have not yet been lifted but will very probably be a rather poor and short one. White narcissi will not be lifted until about two weeks later, and promise to be a good crop.

SUGAR BEET SEED.

A little more than two years ago, says James Wilson, secretary of agriculture, in his annual report, the Department again took up the work of establishing sugar-beet seed culture in the United States, and since that time work has been going on in four representative sections of this country. Strains of pedigreed seed are being established in New York, Michigan, Utah and Washington State, while in Utah and Washington the industry is already assuming commercial importance.

In California also seed is being produced for local use. In Washington state 80,000 pounds of seed were produced in 1904, in Utah about 32,000 pounds and in California about 50,000 pounds, a total of 162,000 pounds. As rapidly as the Department can bring home to the sugar-beet factories the conviction that American-grown seed is as good and often better than the imported, these quantities will be increased, and it is a question of but a few years when the entire 5,000,000 pounds used in the United States will be produced at home.

Two years ago the Department imported all the sugar-beet seed that was distributed for experimental purposes, while during the 1904 season 14,000 pounds of American-grown seed were distributed by the Department to selected farmers for testing in comparison with imported seed furnished to them by the factories. The reports on the stand secured, which is generally indicative of the yield, show that the American seed gave almost without exception a greater and a stronger growth than the imported seed. In a number of instances those portions of fields which were sown with factory seed gave such a poor stand that they had either to be resown or abandoned, while the portions sown with American-grown seed gave good stands and in no case required replanting. The factories during 1904 bought 34,500 pounds of American-grown seed, and a number of these factories are now negotiating with the American growers for contracts to supply the seed they need.

INDIANAPOLIS.

On the afternoon of July 19 Mrs. ErnestHukriede took her own life by hanging while mentally weakened by the severe heat of the period. She was 66 years of age, a native of Germany, and had one son, Fred R., who is associated with his father in business. The funeral took place on Friday, July 21, and was attended by several of the craft, while many others sent floral pieces. Among these was a beautiful wreath from the State Florists' Association of Indiana, arranged by John Rieman. Mr. Hukriede and his family have the sympathy of all the craft in their sad bereavement.

A. B.

Club Meeting.

The regular annual meeting of the New Orleans Horticultural Society took place Wednesday evening, July 19. Several reports of committees were heard. About the last outing, everybody reported having enjoyed it. On request of C. W. Eichling, discussion on the new funeral badges to be adopted by the society was laid over until some other time. J. Newsham, chairman of the next show, wanted to have some understanding about the prize money to be awarded to the members. It was decided that no money would be taken from the treasury for that purpose except after all expenses had been paid. The report of the treasurer showed a balance to the credit of the society of $707.25.

Fred L. Chopin was elected a member and also H. A. Despommier, who is not exactly new, as he was one of the old members, having left the society some years ago on account of bad health. Mr. Despommier, on being reinstated, made some remarks much to the credit of the society. He said that for a long time we could hardly get a new member to join us, but it seems now that at every meeting we have to pass on the admission of one or two more.

Next month the society is going to be twenty years old. On the advice of Chas. White, one of the pioneers of the organization, this anniversary will be celebrated by a banquet. A subscription was opened at once between the members and a nice sum was collected, enough to insure a good layout for August 24.

Then came the election of new officers. For the next twelve months the society will have for president, P. A. Chopin; vice-president, Justin St. Mard; secretary, C. R. Panther; treasurer, John Eblen. The choice of the new president was by acclamation. He is a young man, born and raised in the business, with good ambition, and no doubt the society will prosper with him at the head.

A letter was read from Chas. Eble, the Baronne street florist, who was then in Buffalo with his family. He sent to the society his best wishes for the occasion and we all expect to hear more from him on his return, when he will have visited our brother florists in Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and other places, where it is his intention to stop when coming back to New Orleans.

Various Notes.

Going around a few florists lately, we found M. Cook & Son very busy with the remodeling of their greenhouses planted full with roses and chrysanthemums. Everything looks in tip top order and gives good promise for the opening of the fall flower season.

Business is about at a standstill, although some report a little better than usual at this time of the year. Asters did not do well this season. Abele Bros. report their chrysanthemums as far advanced as possible for the time.

H. Papworth is working day and night to have his fine range of 28x225 greenhouses erected in time for next fall.

DENVER.

The Market.

Trade conditions the past week were only fair and business has nearly reached its summer level, although a large funeral or two helped out to a large extent. The limited variety of stock is generally of good quality. Brides and Bridesmaids of good quality are not overabundant, but of inferior grades there is a sufficient quantity. The new crop of American Beauties is very good, both in bloom and stem, and has been called for more than any other rose, the supply being hardly equal to the demand.

Carnations are still plentiful and, for the season of warm weather, continue to be of fairly good quality, the White Lawson being perhaps better than any other variety; where quality is good $2 per hundred is the price.

Sweet peas are splendid in quality, but such a flood in quantity that were it not for using them up in decorations and funeral work they could never be disposed of. In price they go at wholesale from 10 to 20 cents per hundred. The retail rate is about on a basis of 50 cents per hundred in various-sized bunches. Quantities of Shasta daisies are seen and there has been a good sale for them. A few early asters are seen, but not in such quantity that prices are quotable.

Various Notes.

State Vice-President J. A. Valentine is drumming up the craft throughout the state, impressing the members with the benefits to be derived by attending the annual S. A. F. convention. His appeal may add a few to go to Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Newby, of Logansport, Ind., spent a day in the city on their return from the Portland exposition.

Early closing commenced July 1 and will continue to September 1, the principal stores closing at 6:30 p. m. and at noon on Sunday. E. S. K.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The extreme rainy weather gave way for the wave from the torrid zone, making it so hot that inside planting operations had to be suspended for a time. Rose planting is well in hand; most have mums all benched, and the quantity planted is far in excess of last year. Some have their violets all in, but a method largely followed here by those who do not get time for early planting is to shift the 2-inch stock into 3-inch and 4-inch pots, which keeps the plants moving, thus making really better plants than field-grown stock. One noticeable fact is that not as many violets are being grown this season as last, that less Campbell are planted and more Marie Louise and Imperial. Of course there will be the usual quantity of singles, Princess of Wales and a few Dorsetts. The Campbell violet has seen its day and will soon be entirely discarded, as it is too light.

There will be practically no building this season, unless rebuilding hail-damaged structures and making necessary repairs. Eli Cross had intended to build a large carnation house, and had the glass bought, but has sold it all.

Miss Livingstone, one of Crabb & Hunter's office girls, is building a house about 10x75 feet and is going into violet growing. She intends doing all the work herself.

Cross and Crabb & Hunter are both planting carnations; stock is fine. Lawson will be the main pink in dark; Morning Glory in light pink. In white the honors will be divided as some like Peru best, others Flora Hill and Glacier, while Crabb & Hunter will make Boston Market their leader. When it comes to red, there is a wide diversity of opinion. Bruins Slot lost most of his Crane from stem rot and says he won't grow it any more. Henry Smith has old-time Garfield and Estelle. The Grand Rapids Floral Co. is not bothered so much with stem rot and still swears by Crane. Crabb & Hunter will have Crane and Crusader. All are trying Flamingo and Cardinal, but on a small scale. PACIFIC COAST.

ALL readers, on the Pacific coast especially, will be interested in the pictures and description of the Lewis and Clark exposition at Portland, which appear on other pages of this issue.

PORTLAND, ORE.—There have been very few trade visitors here thus far but we expect that they will come in battalions in August and September. Trade has continued good. H. J. Millatt, with Clarke Bros., is at San Francisco for two weeks' rest.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Flower Show Plan.

At the last meeting of the Seattle Florists' Association a proposition was presented by some of our blooded members to form a stock company to run the flower show this fall. In detail the proposition is as follows: One hundred shares to be issued at $5 per share. On the first call members of the club can buy to the limit of five shares each. On second call, if all the shares are not taken, members can buy more and persons outside the society can buy until the full 100 shares are taken up. The stock company is to pay all expenses of the show and to receive fifty per cent of the profits. The proposition brought forth some fierce discussion on watered stock, etc., and was finally laid over until the next meeting. W. S. Duncan was elected an active member and C. W. Howard, of the California Rose Co., an honorary member.

Various Jottings.

While the people are sweltering with the heat in the eastern states, with the thermometer up in the nineties, the people of Seattle are snuggling under the blankets at night and calling for more covers. We wish we could send you a sample of our summer weather.

Business in the flower stores is away above the summer average. Carnations are still very good and Bonnell is sending in magnificent long-stemmed Bunners and Jacqs.

The city is crowded with visitors going and coming from the fair at Portland, a sprinkling of florists among them.

John Holze, of the Queen City Floral Co., is visiting the fair at Portland.

Mrs. Farringdon, of Victoria, B. C., was in the city this week. She does a heavy shipping business with Seattle.

A lady customer in one of the stores asked: "Have you any nice little umbrella plants?" "Oh, yes, madam, we have some good ones in 4-inch pots at two bits each." "Just the thing, I want one for my cat to eat. You know we live in a flat."

A. B.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The thermometer has averaged 52 degrees for the past week and stock is again of better color. Business is fair for the season. Plenty of funeral orders have the effect of using up large quantities of white stuff. Prices are about the same as they have been for the past two weeks. Asters are commencing to come in and from appearances there will be a heavy crop later on. Golden rod is in considerable demand for decorative purposes and much of it is being shipped in from the country districts hereabouts.

Various Notes.

Thomas Lee, gardener at Hotel del Monte, Monterey, will plant heavily of roses for the coming season.

William Clarke, of Clarke Bros., who has charge of the Fruitvale branch of the firm's business, has departed on a month's trip to Portland.

The Cox Seed Co. reports a heavy list of orders for imported bulbs to be delivered this fall. This firm has established a large trade in this branch with the coast planters.

Malcom Lamond, superintendent of public parks for the city of Oakland, has outlined a system of extensive improvements to be effected this coming winter and spring.

The park commissioners of this city have denied the increase of wages asked for by the gardeners employed in Golden Gate park.

Podesta & Baldocchi are showing some extra fine Beauties for midsummer flowers from the greenhouses of Ferrari Bros.

Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Lemmon, the well known botanists, have departed on a several months' tour of investigation through the valleys of New Mexico and Arizona. They will keep a sharp lookout for anything new in the line of cacti or other desert plants of which Professor Lemmon has made a life study.

Frank Huston, of Dieterich & Huston, of Los Angeles, is in town on a visit.

Frank Shibeley has closed up his Sutter street store and removed his florists' business to 1203 Polk street, near Sutter.

THF JAPANESE QUESTION.

What the Agitation is About.

Easterners, unless they have been residents for a considerable time in California and within recent years, can have no definite ideas of the harm that is now being done to horticulture and horticulturists on the Pacific coast by Japanese gardeners. This was not so noticeable until within the last three or four years, and in that time not less than fifty commercial places have sprung up as if by magic, containing all the way from 5,000 to 100,000 feet of glass and employing in various capacities all the way from five to fifty men. This may not at first strike the reader as anything to be alarmed at until it is taken into consideration that in Alameda county, whence come probably half the supplies used by the San Francisco stores, not less than fifty per cent of the output is grown and marketed exclusively by Japanese. When such a condition has been brought about within less than five years it is high time that the matter be brought to the attention of the trade in general. In San Francisco there have been several meetings of the growers and in a short time plans will be announced in regard to what is best to be done.

HANNAH HOBART THE PRIDE OF CALIFORNIA

The grand prize winner in competition with the latest and very best products in Carnations, east or west, for the last eight years.

Mr. John A. Balmer, of Clealum, Washington, after his visit to our nurseries in January, 1902, wrote an article for a trade paper in which he said: "The Hannah Hobart is really a remarkable flower, never less than four inches, and frequently four and one-half inches across. In color it is a shade deeper than Lawson, but the petal arrangement is quite different, in this respect it most resembles the old Jubilee, but of course the color is different. I saw two large houses of it at Sievers', and the sight is one long to be remembered, hundreds of blooms and not a poor one in the lot, and everyone the exact counterpart of the other, no burst calyxes, but every flower supported on a 24-inch stem, and standing up like soldiers. There is certainly no carnation of its color that can equal it."

The above is a truthful statement of facts by a very competent gentleman, and if needing verification, the simple assertion that the flowers of this magnificient variety of Carnation have been sold wholesale as high as $1.50 per dozen, and none less than $1 per dozen up to date, should be enough to convince anybody of its intrinsic value. (See illustration of an average bloom in the Florists' Review, June 1, 1905.)

The constant inquiry by everyone who has seen the plants in flower is: "When will the Hannah Hobart be for sale?" This led us at last to the conclusion to distribute the same next year, and we are ready to book orders from now on for delivery beginning Jan. 1, 1906.

Send your orders in early because they will be filled strictly in rotation. Price, $3.00 per 12; $15.00 per 100; $120.00 per 1000.

Danger from Japanese Competition.

It is useless for me to waste any time as to the chance the white man has when in direct competition with the Japanese. Born and raised in a country where 5 cents a day is the wage earned by the gardener, they have, through centuries of existing in a condition bordering on actual starvation, reached a stage where they can live in ease where their white brother would speedily succumb. The same method of living having been adopted by them when in California makes them doubly dangerous as a business competitor.

The Japanese come here merely to get together enough money to go home to Japan with and live there the balance of their lives. They do not become citizens or amalgamate with the white races; they bring nothing with them into the country, take the place of white labor by offering to work cheaper, live almost entirely on foodstuffs shipped here from Japan, and when they have money enough they return home. Thus it can be seen that they produce nothing but what they carry from the country with them. In several other lines of business in California they have, by adopting the same tactics, completely displaced the whites, and herein lies the danger that at present confronts us.

Wages and Living Expenses.

Whatever may be the ruling rate of wages paid in grower's establishments, the Japanese always works a little cheaper. The Japanese growers pay their help from $15 to $20 per month and board, whereas the ruling wages for the same class of work in places owned by whites averages from $30 to $40 and board. It is a curious fact that the Japanese will work for his countrymen $5 a month cheaper than he will for any one else, and it is a gratifying fact that there are but few establishments besides the Japanese which now hire any Japanese gardeners. It costs them, when boarding themselves, about $5 to $6 per month for food. They live almost entirely on salt fish and rice and seem to care very little for American dishes.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

THE cottony scale is very prevalent on trees in the northern section of Chicago.

GROWERS are taking increased interest in the plum seedlings of the northwest.

THE Muskegon Nursery Co., Muskegon, Mich., will begin budding 75,000 peach trees August 1.

C. S. HARRISON, horticulturist and author, is now at work on a book entitled The Evergreens, a companion volume for his Peony Manual and The Goldmine in the Front Yard.

E. Y. TEAS has for several years been planting hedges of Spiræa Van Houteii and recommending it as superior to California privet on account of greater hardiness and greater beauty when in bloom.

JOHN CRAIG, secretary of the American Pomological Society, sends out the following: "In deference to many requests and suggestions, coupled with the difficulty of securing the speakers desired for an August meeting, the convention has been postponed till September 19 to 21, 1905. It will occur, therefore, at the Coates House, Kansas City, the place first announced, and under the same auspices. This change assures a good attendance, a good fruit exhibit, a cool, pleasant temperature, and an excellent program."

THE SEASON IN KANSAS.

A. L. Brooke, North Topeka, Kas., writes of conditions in the seedling-growing district, as follows:

"The present season has been a peculiar one throughout. All kinds of predictions were made for Kansas in the early spring, none of which hit the mark anyways closely.

"Late frosts ruined the fine prospects for fruit of nearly all kinds, except the small fruits. Cherries produced less than half a crop. Apples will be even worse. Early apples are selling now to the retailers for $1 per bushel. Winter apples are dropping badly and by picking time there will be very few left for the market.

"The farm prospects were never better for a large yield of all products. Early corn is shooting now and the later corn is coming on with a rapid pace. Not for years have there been such prospects. A few more rains and the corn crop of Kansas will doubtless excel any crop she has ever raised. Wheat is all in the shock or already threshed. The quality is good and the yield is better than for several years here in the Kaw valley.

"If the other conditions were right the farmer would be in shape to buy largely of nursery stock. He has the money. He has not received any money from his orchard for several years. As a rule he does not look beyond the immediate into the future. He prefers to plant more wheat and corn and sell more hogs and not depend on the orchard. Kansas has an apple crop due her but it has been due so long that she will soon be known as an uncertain locality for apples. The Arkansas valley around and above Hutchinson had the apple crop last year and we understand they will be favored again this year.

"As a center for the raising of apple seedlings this is, perhaps, nothing different from other years. As usual, Topeka, with her surrounding towns, will have the large part of the apple seedlings of the United States. We are getting on our feet again after the flood of 1903 and have nothing to complain about."

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

There is an active demand for stock but very little of the goods with which to supply it. Roses are very scarce and what few do come in are of the worst. Carnations are in heaviest supply and some of them are of fair quality. They sell out fast. Some nice gladioli are to be had. Asters are scarce, as also are sweet peas. Green goods are equal to the demand.

Various Notes.

We are sorry to state that the Chicago delegation to the S. A. F. convention will not come through this city. It is decided that the St. Louis, Indianapolis and Louisville delegations will join the boys of this city and proceed to Washington via the B. & O., leaving this city on the noon train of August 14. It is hard to estimate how many will go, but as the time draws nearer more and more of the craft get enthusiastic and resolve to join the crowd. E. G. Gillett, who was appointed by the Florists' Society to look after transportation, reports everything in shape.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Conger have just returned from a visit to Bass Lake, Ind. Mr. Conger spent most of the time fishing and reports a large catch.

Nick Weber will leave the first of the week for a visit to Chicago and the places on Lake Michigan.

The full schedule of prizes offered for cut flowers and plants by the Oakley Fair Association is now out and can be obtained by applying to the secretary. The prizes are well worth trying for.

C. J. Ohmer.

Media, Pa.—Those of the trade who knew John Y. Madill will regret to know of his death.

Winnipeg, Man.—Ormiston & Griffiths who bought the greenhouse and business of H. E. Philpott after he sold his real estate, are removing the houses to a new location. The store is to be a handsome one and on a fine business site.

WINDOW GLASS ADVANCING.

A New York report is that an almost unprecedented demand for all sizes and thicknesses of window glass now prevails in the principal markets throughout the country. After postponing the placing of their contracts for several weeks beyond the usual time in the belief that they could thereby secure lower prices, most of the largest consumers are now hastening to fill requirements. As the market had already started on an upward course before this great demand began, most consumers are now being compelled to pay forty to fifty per cent more for their goods than they would have had to pay six months ago.

The American Window Glass Co., which is the only manufacturing concern now operating its factories, finds itself unable to supply more than one-quarter of the orders for machine-made glass which are pouring in upon it. The other manufacturers discover that their stocks are greatly depleted and that, unless they can resume operations early in the fall, the demand will be far in excess of the supply.

It is generally expected that high prices will prevail throughout the remainder of the year.

CLIMBING FERN.

I note in the Review of July 13, the comment of W. H. Taplin on the climbing fern sent as Lygodium scandens but which he thinks more likely to be L. Japonicum. I have grown a climbing fern which I have known as L. scandens and have used it for many years here at New Orleans and have found it so very useful for decorating that I have worked up quite a stock of it. With us it is quite a rapid grower. J. H. Menard.

Keokuk, Ia.—R. G. Schlotter has removed his store to a better room at 416 Main street.

Araucaria Excelsa

OUR SPECIALITY.

Fill your empty houses now and make 100 per cent on your money while you sleep. Notice—When you undertake anything, do it well or not at all. This is our motto adopted 10 years ago when we imported the first lot of this well known pot plant, the

from Belgium.

These everlasting green foliaged pot plants are growing more in favor by the tasteful plant buyers of this land from year to year. Please watch the growth of our importation during the last 10 years: first year 100, second 250, third 500, fourth 1000, fifth 2,000. This year (1905) which is the 10th anniversary of our first importation, our spring importation amounted to 5,000. All these are grown for us under contract by an Araucaria specialist in Belgium. I must say for the benefit of my customers that they were never before so nice and large for the money as this year. I herewith quote you special prices on these, in or out of:

FOR THE CONTRIBUTOR.

The following is from an article on literary work published in a recent issue of the Chicago Tribune:

"Put upon a sound basis of common sense, the contributor to the current periodical and daily press should remember that he is not an editor; frequently an editor is in the position of printing something which he cares nothing for himself. The contributor, to be successful, needs to give the editor credit for knowing what he wants, and, once acceding this, to refrain from sending him matter that is out of line with his policy.

"Clear, typewritten copy may cover several sins of commission in an otherwise good article. Bad pen copy may ruin the prospects of some of the best products of the pen; a reader may resent such copy beyond trying to decipher it, while in these days of the typesetting machine there is a double loss in having a man who can set five times the work of a hand compositor sit at a $3,500 machine and not do half the work of the hand compositor."

A CLOSED SYSTEM.

We are heating with hot water in a closed system which is operated under fifty pounds pressure. The pipes are on the down-hill plan from the boiler. Will it increase the efficiency to have the flows rise to the farthest point from the boiler? M. A. B.

——

Under as high a pressure as you maintain I doubt if it would prove a very decided advantage to change the slope of the flow pipes in your system. Were you working under a low pressure, six to ten pounds, the change would undoubtedly result in greater benefit than it would under present conditions. Some slight advantage would result from the change, even with the high pressure you use, but whether or not it would justify the expense of the necessary alterations is difficult to predict. L. C. C.

HEATING IN OREGON.

We have a shop 18x18 under which is a basement. Running south from the shop is an even-span house 18x52 and ten and one-half feet to the ridge. Running west from the shop is a three-quarter-span house 18x75 and eight feet to the ridge. We want to heat these two houses with one furnace, using a pipe boiler and hot water under ten to fifteen pounds of pressure. Will you please advise us as to size of boiler, amount of piping, etc. We already have a brick chimney 12x16 inches inside measure and eighteen feet high. The temperature at night must be 55 degrees in the longer house and 50 in the shorter house. The thermometer rarely falls below zero here. H. & F.

The two houses which you wish to heat will require pipe as follows, if the sizes I have selected are satisfactory: The house fifty-two feet long can be successfully heated with a 2-inch flow and nine 2-inch returns arranged under the benches or along the side walls. The house seventy-five feet long, if supplied with a 2½-inch riser and thirteen 2-inch returns, arranged as above suggested for the smaller house, will give the temperature desired.

If you use a pipe boiler as you suggest it should have a heating capacity to carry about 1,200 feet of radiation. To accomplish this the boiler should have at least 150 feet of heating surface. If 1½-inch pipe is used for the construction of the boiler the coils should be made to contain between 300 and 325 lineal feet of pipe of that size. The number of pipes in the manifolds used will depend upon the length. A boiler containing less than 300 feet of 1½-inch pipe, exposed to the fire will not have sufficient capacity to do your work. For a suggestion regarding the construction of such a boiler see Florists' Review of December 31, 1903, p. 269.

LEAKY GUTTERS.

I have in Knoxville a number of connecting houses which were built a year apart which caused us to use single gutters, which, of course, made it difficult to prevent them from leaking. I wish to fill the openings through which the water pours in the smallest rains and I do not know what is best to use for that purpose. Can you give me information which will be the safest? H. L. L.

where one house has been attached to another, there is an imperfect gutter and there are some open joints that leak. If this is the case, then thoroughly clean the gutters and wherever there is an opening, say of a sixteenth of an inch, plug it full of a mixture of white and red lead, which should be about the consistency of putty. The red lead you buy as a dry powder and that will stiffen up the white lead. Then give the whole surface of the gutter two coats of thick white lead paint. That should prevent any leaking. Our 2-inch cypress gutters we paint annually and have no trouble with them. W. S.

INSUFFICIENT DETAIL.

We have a greenhouse heated by a Wilks boiler. The house rises about eight feet in its length of 100 feet. The main flow runs on a gradual rise to the highest point of the house. Another flow rises four feet at the boiler, then has a gradual rise of ten feet, drops six feet and returns to the boiler gradually. The boiler has about as much 2-inch pipe as the maker lists it to carry, but I want to make a small addition and would like to know if it will carry a little more pipe if the boiler is sunk six or eight feet below the floor of the greenhouse? F. J. U.

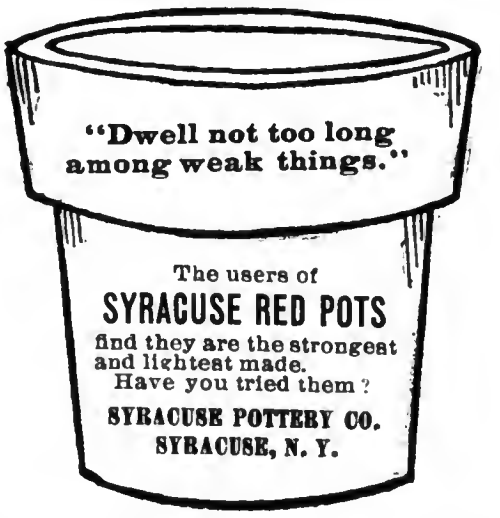
Without knowing the size or rated capacity of the boiler in question, or how much piping you now have, it is absolutely impossible to tell whether or not it will carry more radiation. If you will give the number, size, or rated capacity of your boiler and the length and sizes of the pipes now supplied by it, it will be possible for us to answer your question. L. C. C.

LETTUCE HOUSES.

I am building three houses 20x100 feet, all connected, twelve feet to the ridge, for lettuce growing. I have a lot of 2½-inch and 3-inch pipe which I have been using for hot water. I want to change to steam. Could I use this pipe for steam? How many pipes and what size boiler would it take to heat these houses to 50 or 60 degrees where it gets about 25 degrees below zero? H. F. A.



By running a 3-inch riser under the ridge of each of the outside houses, from the boiler to the most distant end, and returning through eighteen 2½-inch pipes you will get the necessary radiation. It would be a good plan to arrange three return pipes along each of the outside walls, or under the side benches, distributing the other twelve returns as evenly as possible under the other benches, or, if over them, twenty or more inches above the surface of the beds, if solid beds. This large pipe is not as economical to handle and install as smaller pipe but should give good satisfaction if well placed in the houses. A boiler rated to supply 2,000 feet of radiation will be adequate for your needs with allowance for a sufficient factor of safety. L. C. C.

INCREASED RADIATION.

We have four greenhouses, 14x50 feet, heated by hot water; fourteen feet to the ridge, two feet of glass on the east side wall, ends of the houses also of glass. Our boiler is fourteen feet long by thirty inches wide. It is a fire-box boiler without return flues. There is a 4-inch flow pipe feeding two lines of 4-inch pipe in each house; that is four returns leading in one 4-inch pipe. The fall is twelve inches and then we have a line of 3½-inch pipe running all around the inside wall of the houses and entering in the same return. In the very cold weather, when the temperature is 15 below zero in Wisconsin, it is difficult to keep the houses up to 50 degrees. What I want to know is would it be advisable to have one more 4-inch flow on the other end of the boiler and an independent return? Would that give me more heating capacity? T. W. & S.

If your boiler is already tapped for a 4-inch flow this is sufficient for the capacity of the boiler and should supply heat for about 1,500 lineal feet of 4-inch pipe. If you are not now getting sufficient heat in your houses it is because of a lack of sufficient radiating surface in the houses. To maintain a temperature of 60 degrees during severe weather each of your houses should have six runs of 4-inch pipe the length of the house, or its equivalent, and to carry 50 degrees there should be five runs of 4-inch pipe. If I understand the arrangement of your piping you lack considerable, and in order to make the plant safe the area should be brought up to the amount specified. It will not be an advantage to tap the boiler again or to run an independent flow or return if those already in use are 4-inch. Make those you already have do more work by adding more radiation in the houses where you need it. L. C. C.

Oshkosh, Wis.—The Isaac Miles estate has equipped its boiler plant with the Martin rocking grate which is largely used by the big growers around Chicago.

Sherman, Tex.—H. O. Hannah has taken his son, Fred, into the firm. Hannah & Son have just put up a new house 22x100. A recent hail storm broke 1,400 square feet of their glass. Stock is in fine condition.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Harrisii Lilies.

The Bermuda lilies are arriving and there should be no delay in getting them potted. If 5 to 7-inch bulbs put them into 5-inch pots at once. If they are 7 to 9-inch bulbs they can go into 4-inch pots and later be shifted into 6-inch, but if you have plenty of room this is unnecessary labor and they can at once go into the pots they are to flower in. We like to stand them on ashes in a cold frame, with their pots touching, and after one good watering cover the whole surface with one inch of well rotted manure. This will keep them from drying out continuously and when the leaves appear above the mulch they will be sufficiently rooted to bring into the houses. It is well to have them in a frame. In case of frequent heavy rains they can be protected.

It is well to have a good, big batch of these lilies, for there are few more profitable crops. The 5 to 7-inch bulbs will cost you, perhaps, 4 cents and if they only average three buds at wholesale they should return you 30 to 35 cents. Think what little room they take up.

Lilies like a nice, sandy loam with a fifth of manure, but not fresh manure. Old hotbed compost suits them well. That you could use to one-third the bulk of the fresh loam. If you were making a lily bed for the flower garden you would put the bulb six inches under ground, and so you would a hyacinth, but that does not work in forcing; they do best when the top of the bulb is just even with the surface of the soil in the pot.

Begonia Lorraine.

From now on the young plants of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine will be making a free growth and the stronger young plants can be shifted into 4-inch pots. Manage to shade these during the hottest hours with a lattice shade that can be removed after 4 p. m. and not used at all during dull, cloudy days. Keep the house humid by wetting down the paths and beneath the benches, but do not wet the foliage of the begonias.

Freesias.

Freesia refracta alba is with us again. Grand bulbs of this sweet flower are now sold very cheaply. It is well to have some from fall until late spring. The best freesias I have ever seen were planted on a bench in rows about four inches apart and two inches between the bulbs. This may not be convenient and they can be grown very nicely in flats four inches deep, the flats stood in cold frames until the growth is well developed. Unless you are a grower for the wholesale market you do not want a great lot started at once, but say 500 or so started every two weeks. The quantity will all depend upon your market for them.

Some beginners make the mistake of treating the freesia as they would a tulip or narcissus. It is not a bulb but a corm and only wants pressing into the soil just out of sight and no more covering is wanted and it is surprising how many can be grown in a small space. Last winter we noticed some splendidly flowered 6-inch pots of freesias. There were fifteen corms to a pot.

Asparagus Sprengeri.

Now that you have your roses planted, is there no place beneath the gutters or at the sides or ends of the houses where you can stand a lot of deep boxes planted with the useful Asparagus Sprengeri? This is such a tremendous feeder that it is soon exhausted in an ordinary bench and after one good picking you do not get much more. We utilize old glass boxes for the purpose, making them two feet long, six inches wide and eighteen inches deep, filling the boxes firmly with heavy loam, and with a third of rather fresh manure and putting three asparagus plants in each box. The deep soil suits them and so does the rose house temperature. We are never overdone with nice sprays. It goes well with any flower. These boxes will give you a cutting for two years, but if you want best results you cannot overdo it the second year with liquid manure.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

RIVERTON NOTES.

Modern journalism demands wealth of circumstantial detail. We are told in a full column account of all that the Hon. Elihu Root said and declined to say when he was asked about his letter to Mayor Weaver, of all that he did, and probably we would have been told of all that his family did, only unluckily they were not in Washington and so could not be reached.

The standard of the horticultural press is in its way quite as high as that of the dailies. Its readers want to know what is doing and they want to know it promptly. So, as the convention is to meet in Washington in a few weeks and many delegates will, it is hoped, spend a few days there in passing, the REVIEW instructed its representative to run down to Dreer's and look about.

That glorious July afternoon the Dreer place smiled its ever-cordial welcome. It was at its best, clean, neat, orderly, not a trace of the heavy spring rush left. Planting, cultivating, shifting, cleaning, spreading, all complete right up to time. This was evident everywhere, in the houses, benches and fields. Anyone who has tried, even on a small place, to keep up with the work during the spring and early summer knows how extremely difficult is the task.

To leave generalities, first came a stroll through two or three dozen houses. Imported Kentia Forsteriana in neat little tubs were very attractive. They are shipped from Europe in the tubs, which are very light; the plants seemed to thrive in them and, of course, carried better. These were fine decorative stock.

Nephrolepis Scottii continues in great favor. The stock is very large and in excellent condition. It is an accepted axiom that it does best in the full sunlight, the growth being stockier and more rapid. When the plants are finished a little shade seems beneficial to color them. Unlike the Boston fern, they appear to do well when potted from the bench.

Harry C. Sim, the clever grower of hardy plants, gave the visitor a kindly welcome and the pair went outside to see the perennial phloxes. There were enough in flower to give a very good idea of the colors and shades of color of some of the leading early varieties. The great mass of young stock will not be in bloom until August. It will make a grand show during convention week and this alone will be worth going miles to see. Fancy two fields of perennial phloxes, aggregating 125,000 plants, a great majority of them in bloom, all correctly labeled and the colors side by side, inviting comparison. Is not that enough to stir the blood of a true gardener?

After looking at the delphiniums the pair strolled out to see the cannas, where they were overtaken by J. D. Eisele. Men are only grown-up boys and I must confess to a boyish feeling that when I met Mr. Eisele he would climb upon a pedestal and say "see what I have done," but Mr. Eisele never does this. He just says how glad he is to see you and makes you feel it is so. He never seems to remember that he has forgotten more about plants, which isn't very much, than you are ever likely to know, but meets you on a footing of equality, very gratifying to one's amour propre.

There was a great deal of interest to talk about as we walked through the acres and acres of hardy perennials, looked over the long frames full of thrifty young ferns and took a hasty glance at the splendid assortment of kentias in all sizes. I noticed especially Mr. Eisele's comment on Nephrolepis Barrowsii, which he thinks will take the place in crested ferns that N. Scottii is taking among the plain-leaved varieties.

I could go on indefinitely about the beauties and the interests of this wondrous place, but how much better it would be for you to see it for yourself and to meet and learn to esteem the men who shape its destinies.

PHIL.

NOTES ON THE NEWER KINDS.

It is always interesting to see how the new additions to the collection behave and a few brief notes as to the behavior of some of the current novelties will not be amiss.

Mrs. William Duckham was perhaps the most widely disseminated of all the new kinds and reports from everywhere indicate that it is making a splendid growth, a large batch that I noted on a private estate last week in Connecticut being, I think, the finest lot of plants I ever saw. It is kind and free-growing everywhere I have seen it and I predict that it will become a very popular variety.

Another yellow that has been largely planted by commercial growers and is being watched with much interest is Merstham Yellow. The chief merit of this variety is its earliness and those growers who want to get the benefit of its earliness should not fail to remember that the early bud should be secured. The first bud that shows after about August 8 should be taken, because it is a physical impossibility, after waiting for the last bud in September to expect to cut flowers by October 1. The average bud needs at least eight weeks to come to maturity, many crown buds longer than that, so that the necessity for taking the early bud is patent to the veriest novice.

Merstham Yellow I believe will fill a large place in the market when it is generally distributed among the trade. The habit is dwarf and ideal and, while foliage and stem are ample, they are not so strong as not to permit of its being planted fairly closely together, which is quite an important point in commercial culture.

White Mrs. Coombes seems to be giving good satisfaction, as was to be expected from its parentage, and so is also Jeannie Nonin. The latter variety should be a serious rival to Eaton, for it is apparently an equally strong grower and, as shown before the committees last year, is without Eaton's coarseness.

Emily Mileham, a reflexing white, is also making a very fine growth and I look to see some grand flowers staged this fall of this variety. Mileham does not come in conflict on the boards with any other variety, as Merza is in another class and Mrs. D. V. West, another novelty, is almost the only one that is likely to be competing against it.

J. H. Doyle has not done so well as it might in some sections, but other growers are rounding it up in great shape. Doyle evidently wants a long season of growth, as it produces buds frequently and keeps very dwarf on that account. Doyle will never have a place beyond being an exhibition flower, but I look to see it very prominent in the shows this fall.

Mrs. J. A. Miller is making fine growth everywhere, so far as reported, and shows ideal foliage and stem; in fact, none of the new kinds this year show any sky-scraping tendency, due somewhat to the fact that any seedling that shows a predilection for running too high is destroyed before it flowers by many of the present day hybridists.

Valerie Greenham I fear must be discarded. A peculiar fungoid disease has appeared on it, which is injuring the young foliage and crippling the plant so much as to make it almost worthless.

Brighthurst and Mrs. H. A. Allen are both growing nicely and should render a good account of themselves.

It is perhaps early to say definitely, but from present indications there will be lots of fun at the exhibitions later on.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

PINCHING.

Will you kindly tell me when is the proper time to stop topping pot chrysanthemum plants? T. H.

Plants should not be topped again, the last week in July being about as late as pinching should be practiced. If pinched too late the flowers are small and the stem too short, particularly in the case of Ivory, Pacific and other dwarf

CAPE FLOWERS.

The gathering, drying and packing for export cape flowers (Helichrysum grandiflorum) constitutes a very important industry in Hermanus, Stanford, and one or two other villages and hamlets in the division of Caledon, on the southwest coast of the Cape Colony in South Africa. The area over which these flowers grow is limited to this corner of the colony, and the whole industry is monopolized by two or three men, who partly own and further lease the right of gathering, and who have erected extensive buildings for drying and packing the flowers. These are locally known as "flower-houses," and their strange gaol-like appearance, with large sheets of perforated iron substituted for ordinary windows, to insure a constant draught, greatly puzzles the uninitiated as to their origin and use.

During the season such enormous quantities of these everlastings daily come in from the veld—borne not only on the heads of women and children, but in bullock wagon loads at a time—that, especially in such an exceptionally good season as we had in 1903, these flower-houses prove quite too small for the purpose for which they were erected; so that in order to obtain the necessary drying space every available loft in the place is hired, the price paid varying from 5s to £1 per month per loft.

Having only within the last six months taken up my abode at the lovely and popular seaside resort of Hermanus, and knowing nothing previously of this curious industry, I was not a little surprised when abruptly asked by an agent of the monopolizer of the industry in these parts, whether I would mind letting my loft for fifteen or twenty days. Not caring to have my privacy invaded, I at first strongly objected, and only consented after having ascertained that almost every loft in the town—containing about 120 houses—was hired, and most of them already full of these flowers.

On the following morning at break of day I had already cause to regret my bargain, as, roused from my slumbers by men noisily emptying sackfuls of the flowers over my drowsy head, I tried to imagine the feelings of one buried alive, with wreaths of these same immortelles rattling on his or her coffin! It was a grnesome thought, but which I found a difficulty in dismissing. So that literally as well as metaphorically I had a sad awakening—an awakening that is, alas! repeated daily, when at dawn of day I and my wife are aroused from our slumbers by two or three niggers, armed with long wooden hoes, scraping the flowers about directly over our sleepy heads; and this despite the assurance that the flowers would only require "two turnings over,'' and that we should not be disturbed.

I had frequently passed the ''flower-house''—situated in one of the main streets of Hermanus—and had been told, in answer to my inquiries, why it was thus called, and for what special purpose it had been built; but as it was always locked and empty (save when the local musical society occasionaly held a concert in it for some charitable purpose) I had concluded that the one-time flourishing helichrysum industry had met the fate of many similar ventures and come to a bad end, unaware that the whole business, upon which a few men had grown wealthy, was carried on only during the months of November and December.

Although I have had experience enough and to spare of the drying process, I find it difficult to get information respecting the business side of this industry. In reply to my inquiries I have been politely told that the prices given and obtained were ''business matters''—affairs of Egypt, in fact, and not communicable. I know, however, that the price paid to the gatherers—who pluck the flowers with about an inch of stem attached—is only 1s 6d per three-bushel bag, the contents of which, when dried, would probably weigh thirty pounds. I have also been assured by a man whose father was one of the pioneers of this industry that some twelve or fifteen years ago these flowers sold in Cape Town for £1 sterling per pound! It is well known that this same pioneer was a comparatively poor man upon his entering upon a lease of a farm on which these flowers grow in great profusion, and that after a few years' tenancy he purchased the farm for £6,000, being mostly money made out of everlastings! From all I can glean they now fetch on the European continent from 5s to 10s per pound. They are exported through a German house in Cape Town, and go to Hamburgh in the first instance. Messrs. Haage & Schmidt, of Erfurt, a wholesale seed house, used to do a large trade in these flowers, selling the best quality in white as imported, and dyeing the inferior or off-colored flowers in the endless series of aniline colors.

For carefully collected seed of the helichrysum as high as 10s per ounce has been paid to the collectors. This was sold—''at a good profit,'' says my informant—to Vilmorin & Andrieux, of Paris, under agreement to let them have a monopoly of the gathering. Hence, presumably, these flowers are now produced under cultivation in the south of France, and this may account for the decline in price here.

The hugh snow-white heaps of these flowers in the packing house are a most entrancing sight. They are packed for export in large paper-lined boxes, made specially for the purpose. Every layer of flowers of a foot or so deep is pressed down by boards and weights, by which means about 100 to 130 pounds weight of flowers is got into one of these large boxes. They are conveyed by bullock wagon to the nearest railway station (some twenty miles off) en route to Hamburgh via Cape Town.

A gentleman who has for some years past been engaged in the everlasting flower industry, and who, besides possessing in his own right extensive properties, has acquired concessionary rights for gathering these flowers over many other farms, has recently sold such rights to a syndicate for the sum of £45,000 sterling! This fact serves to convey some idea of the extent and value of this curious industry.—S. A. Deacon, in Gardeners' Chronicle.

WATERING.

During the period when growth is most rapid the plants require copious supplies of water to reduce the food to an assimilable condition and particular pains should be taken to keep the soil supplied with the requisite amount of moisture to effect this purpose without causing any sogginess.

The first condition required to enable us to perform the operation effectively is to have the drainage as perfect as possible, for without this even the most skillful cannot bring about good results, and with the drainage perfect there is less danger of the careless or incompetent endangering the crops.

A careful examination of the condition of the soil should be made previous to applying the hose and all dry spots noted and toned up before the general watering, so that the whole mass may be equally moistened.

The art of watering with the hose is only learned after long practice and observation and is one of the most difficult to describe, for more can be done in a short object lesson than in columns of directions. Some young men acquire the art very quickly, while others with all sorts of lessons never seem to master it, possibly because they have never troubled themselves to find out the reason why they had to use water at all.

If the house needs syringing care must be taken not to moisten the bench too much when watering, as the subsequent syringing may cause the soil to become saturated, a condition which should be carefully avoided, especially where Beauties or other varieties which are susceptible to black spot are concerned, as this condition causes a chilling of the feeding roots and a consequent stagnation of sap, reducing the vitality of the plants.

During cloudy or chilly weather it is safer to allow the soil to become rather dry and keep the surface well stirred than to run any risk of giving more water than the plants can use, just keeping the soil mellow enough to keep the plants from suffering.

By carefully studying attending conditions and quality of soils, some of which are much more retentive of moisture than others, the requisite supply to keep the plants healthy and growing can soon be gaged and success attained. Ribes.

MANURE.

I am about to plant a house of roses and cannot secure any cow manure and would ask if you could advise a substitute? Can I count on any success, not having any cow manure? The plants are in 3½-inch pots and growing nicely at present. H. B. S.

When cow manure cannot be had, well decomposed horse manure is a good substitute, especially where the soil is of a heavy, clayey nature.

It is well always to bear in mind that there are different grades of horse manure, the best quality being that produced by grain and hay fed animals, the poorest that which is produced by animals fed on brewery products.

The manure should be thoroughly incorporated with the soil and should be turned over a few times before using to prevent heating in the bench. By handling the compost in this manner, and applying good cultural methods, there is no doubt but that satisfactory results will be achieved. Ribes.

DRAUGHT ON ROSES.

In the Florists' Manual we read: ''From the time roses are planted till frosts occur they cannot possibly have too much ventilation.'' Are we to understand that ventilators and doors may be left open day and night, or in other words will a draught from an open door or ventilator during the warm days of summer cause mildew?

J. W. M.

This question enters into the most important part of rose growing, or at least their management. In saying that roses cannot have too much ventilation, I should have written ''till you begin to fire.'' I certainly did not mean by ventilation that you could leave the doors open, either night or day. We remember very well some years ago looking through the houses of a first-class rose grower in the city of Philadelphia. As I was the last of a small party to enter a house of Bridesmaids I was about to close the door and the proprietor said, ''Never mind the door.'' This was in early October. I did not notice any mildew. This would not do for western New York.

Mildew is caused or produced by several conditions. Extreme heat, a chill after being kept steadily at 58 degrees at night to drop to 48 degrees for a few hours. A draught is one of the most fruitful causes of mildew. Man, beast nor plant do not like draughts. A man can work outdoors at 10 below zero and warm his feet every ten minutes in ice water, as the writer has done for days in succession, and gain nothing but a splendid appetite, but let the same man sit ten minutes in a draught, however warm the day, and a bad cold quickly follows. The spores of the rose mildew are ever present, but do not find a lodgment as long as the plant is robust. Directly there is loss of vitality from any cause the spores of the mildew find a field in which to vegetate. No, by no means leave doors open.

We have thought and talked a good deal the past five or six years on the summer treatment of these tea roses. That little advice was meant to guard against what would seem a proper practice of shutting up the houses on a cool night when you have no fire heat. It seems right, but it is wrong. Without fire heat, and the houses closed tight, there is a dampness that settles on the foliage. You can see it in the morning by the glistening dewdrops on the edges of the leaf. If this is continued four or five nights in succession you will not only have mildew but a worse disease than mildew, a dropping of the foliage, first the very youngest leaves, spreading to the mature foliage and finally to the young shoots. We have seen this occur in September and again in May, when we were foolish enough to let out the fires and shut up the houses.

Now it may not be necessary, or wise, further south, but in northern New York and the lake region the surest way to produce good roses is never to let your fires out the entire summer. We have a week of weather when no artificial heat may be needed, then will come a night or two cool or cool and wet. Then it is with a little steam on that you can shut up, or, if rainy but warm, use both steam and ventilation. During the month of August and the first half of September if it goes down to 45 degrees outside and you cannot fire, then a few inches of ventilation will dispel that dampness which is much more dangerous than a low temperature. P. A. CHOPIN.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society, which has enjoyed a very prosperous year under the presidency of Harry Papworth, has chosen another of the new school of florists as his successor, P. A. Chopin, one of the younger members but one of push, under whose guidance the society will make still further progress and become still more widely influential in all matters affecting the welfare of trade.

Mr. Chopin is the exemplar of the modern New Orleans, as his father was of the old, for he is the son of the late Gustav Chopin, a pioneer florist of the Crescent City. He was born in 1874 and as a youth determined to follow his father's profession. He acquired the education of the local schools and then went to Europe to study horticulture, spending several years at well-known trade centers. Returning to New Orleans, he started in business for himself and has just completed one of the finest retail establishments in the south, at Eighth and Magazine streets. He is a firm believer in the future of New Orleans and sees no bounds to trade possibilities. He is a member of the board of park commissioners and also is a member of the Louisiana Field Artillery, in which he commands Battery E.

For three years Mr. Chopin has been a member of the Society of American Florists. He attended the conventions at St. Louis, Milwaukee and Asheville.

Department of Plant Registration.

Richard F. Gloede, Evanston, Ill., submits for registration zonal geranium Kenilworth; growth and habit tall and robust; flowers single, dark scarlet; foliage large and leathery; seedling, three years old. Also zonal geranium Illinois, sport from Beaute Poitevine, semi-double, identical with the parent in every particular with the exception of the petals, which are irregularly toothed and somewhat larger than in Poitevine, and the blossoms are more widely open.

visitors be introduced and made acquainted with each other has appointed from its reception committee a special committee on introduction, consisting of Geo. C. Schafer, Chas. Henlock and Franklin A. Whelan.

Traveling representatives of the S. A. F., appointed last winter, will kindly report at the Convention hall, reception committee room, on arrival in Washington, and are asked to be present and work with the above committee all of the first day and evening of the convention, to promote general acquaintance.

The following is the list of traveling representatives appointed by the president: J. R. Fotheringham, Paul Berkowitz, S. S. Skidelsky, B. Eschner, D. McRorie, E. J. Fancourt, A. Ringier, C. S. Ford and C. W. Scott.

NOT HOT IN WASHINGTON.

William F. Gude, Washington, D. C., writes: "The photograph of our store front (reproduced on page 551) was taken for no other reason than to show the florists throughout the United States that it is not too hot in Washington during July and August for persons to stand and look at a florist's window. This scene is a daily occurrence at 1214 F street, and you will see from the picture that none of the people seem uncomfortable or very warm. This picture was taken between the hours of 1 and 2 p. m. on Tuesday, July 25, 1905."

GERANIUMS.

Will you please let me know when I should slip geraniums so they will bloom or bud a week before Decoration day? Please let me know what to do for the little white flies under all the leaves. I have tried everything. J. G.

Supposing your stock plants are planted out, which they should be, for you get best cuttings from outside plants, then take cuttings from the first to the middle of September. I advise as early as this because it gives the plants time to break and give you another crop of cuttings before the old plants are injured by severe frost. No matter whether you take the cuttings the first of September or first of October, they should be anxious to flower the end of May.

Root the cuttings in 2-inch or 2½-inch pots. Pot firmly and keep them in the sun. Water thoroughly the first time; after that only when they are quite dry. We shift into 3-inch pots soon after New Year's and again into 4-inch as soon as we can after April 1. About the first of February we get a cutting from the top of each plant. If not large enough to give us a cutting, then just nip out the last joint to encourage lateral growth, which makes a branching plant.

Our plants never fail to be a mass of bloom on Memorial day, or a week before, and it is always surprising to hear of the zonal geraniums not flowering. Too much animal manure, too much shade and loose potting are the principal reasons for the failure to flower in time.

Some varieties are more precocious than others. Two splendid varieties, S. A. Nutt and Mrs. F. Perkins, have a tendency to flower when quite small. When you move over the plants on the bench, which cannot be done too often, you should pinch off all buds until the first of May.

Some large geranium growers dispense with the shift at New Year's and keep the little plants in 2½-inch pots until the middle of February and then shift into 3½-inch. This plan makes amply good bedding plants. Bone meal at the last shift is much better than animal manure, a pint to a bushel of loam.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Benching the Plants.

Weather conditions in Connecticut have been such that carnation plants are in prime shape to house. The hot weather and infrequent rains have brought about a hardy growth, making the tissue firm and less liable to wilt than if rains had been abundant. This is very desirable, as plants establish quickly, making it possible to discontinue shading and syringing in a short time.

From the time plants are lifted until well under way no detail, however small, should escape attention. The main points are to allow the roots out of soil the least possible time, plant thoroughly, avoid draughts, supply no more water at the root than is absolutely necessary and syringe cautiously.

Now, a word about thorough planting. I will venture the statement that more plants are lost or rendered worse than useless by careless planting than by any other cause. With practice one can plant rapidly and still be thorough, but better be a trifle slower than to allow any carelessness to enter into the work. No amount of coddling, petting or special treatment will offset slipshod planting.

Should the bench soil become dry before ready to begin work, wet down the afternoon before, not to the point of saturation, but just so a handful, when squeezed into a ball, will retain its shape when released. Keep those of a size together, maintain straight rows across and lengthwise the bed to facilitate supporting and keep a few plants ahead of the planter.

Make a hole with the right hand, removing a handful or two of soil, allowing it to remain loosely near the edge. By a circular movement of the same hand in the hole form a small hill, rising to within about an inch of surface level. Meanwhile the left hand has grasped the plant, whose root system should be arranged to fall over the hill, the different branches radiating in every direction. Draw in about one-half the loose soil, move the plant slightly to sift soil among roots, cover with the remainder, press firmly and the simple deed is done.

The depth of the hole and its width will necessarily vary according to quantity of roots and the size of the small hill must be made to correspond with the neck of the plant.

The above procedure applies when the plants are lifted without soil adhering. If cuttings were potted in 2-inch and shifted to larger pots many plants can be taken in with the ball intact, when little arrangement of roots is necessary, but in spite of all care a large portion are often free from soil.

I am not in favor of lifting with a large ball to be transferred to the bench, preferring rather that most of the field soil be shaken off, thus giving the roots contact with fresh soil.

When from fifty to seventy-five plants are benched water enough to settle the soil but do not saturate the whole bench, as was the former custom. Apply directly around the plant. When settled cover lightly with loose soil to conserve moisture.

Several syringings daily will be needed and should be applied in the form of a mist. Aim the hose high in the air, keeping the thumb or finger in such position that the desired mist will fall lightly from above.

Early Planting.

I am not one to discourage early planting. On the contrary, I am an earnest advocate of the practice. At the same time there is such a thing as overdoing the matter by making no allowance for peculiarities of different varieties. Plan to get those of slow growth and impatient of disturbance at root, in first. Many of the quick-growing sorts are better off another two weeks in the field.

It is hoped that it is needless to mention the advantage of potting a few of each variety for use in replacing those which for any reason go wrong.

Shipping Field-grown Plants.

If you have to buy any plants to finish planting your beds find out what you are going to need and order them at once. You do not need to wait until you have all your own plants housed to do this. You can size up your own plants, and you can figure to the single one how many your beds will hold. If you only plant a house or two you can count the good plants one by one and it will pay you for the little time it takes.

It does not pay to plant any runty plants of standard varieties when you can buy good plants as reasonably as they are offered these days. If you will just stop to think that it only takes from two to three blooms to pay for the plant and that a good, strong, healthy plant will produce from five to ten blooms more than a runty plant you will see which pays best.

When I say a runty plant I mean one that is diseased or very much undersized and stunted. Any plant in good health, even though it be a little below the average in size is in most cases preferable to a shipped plant, even if it is shipped only a short distance. There are many reasons for this, but I will give only one or two. When a plant is shipped it is usually out of the ground from two to four or more days, a bad thing for the plant. They are crowded in a box and constantly moist, giving fusarium fungus a splendid chance to start. Very often the boxes are left in the sun by the express company, and more often in the draught, all of which will have its effect on the plants. Then again, the grower from whom you buy the plants may have a very different soil from yours, and if your soil is less favorable than his, the plants will not take hold as readily as those that have been growing in the same soil. But nevertheless, plants are shipped long distances and give profitable crops. Don't plant poor stock and don't leave any space vacant.

Get the plants as early as you can. The chances of overcoming any unfavorable conditions will be much better if they are planted early than if planted late in the fall. If the distance is not great it will pay you to have the plants shipped with a ball of earth about the size of a goose-egg attached to the roots. Unless you order them shipped this way they will usually be shaken clear of all the soil, which of course is preferable in case of long shipments. The soil will make some difference in the express bill, but it will pay you.

When unpacking the plants notice whether there has been any heating or drying along the edge of the box. In either case dip the plants into a pail of water and in any case get them planted as soon as you can. These plants will need closer shading and more frequent syringing than your own plants; in fact they will need closer attention in every way the first week, after which you can handle them the same as your own. They will continue to look wilted on bright days longer than your own plants and a very slight spraying at such times will help them. They will also lose a little more of the foliage than your own, but otherwise they will soon adjust themselves to their new surroundings and do well if considerately handled.

TEMPERATURES.

We have two houses running east and west, with two benches each about 6x65 feet. We want to use these for carnations and have the following varieties: Lawson, Mrs. Nelson, Flora Hill, Norway, Prosperity, Inc, Enchantress, Roosevelt, Harlowarden, Estelle, Boston Market, Peru and Eldorado. Which varieties will do best together?

K. & M.

I will merely give you the temperatures best suited to the varieties you mention and you can arrange them on your benches, as you know best how your houses run in regard to heat. But be sure you plant Lawson and Enchantress where you can shade them in the spring, on account of fading the blooms. Also be sure that Enchantress, Peru and Harlowarden have plenty of headroom as they will grow three feet and over in height. Lawson wants 54 degrees, Nelson 50, Flora Hill 52 to 54, Norway 50, Prosperity 52 to 54, Mrs. Ine 52, Enchantress 50, Roosevelt 52, Harlowarden 50 to 52, Estelle 52, Boston Market 52, Peru 50, Eldorado 52.

A. F. J. Baur.

NOT GOOD.

Will cuttings of carnations made from the tops of field plants make stock that will be of any consequence, in other words, the toppings of the carnation plants?

H. G. F.

The toppings from carnation plants are never good for anything if the topping is done properly. We have seen them used for cuttings early in the spring, from new or scarce varieties, but always with indifferent success. In those cases the tops were not allowed to lengthen out as they should have been, and usually more harm was done the young plant than what good could come from the cutting. This could not be done with the plants in the field, even if you were to take off the tops before they begin to run up. You could not root them on account of the heat, and even if you did succeed in rooting them, what would you do with them? They would not produce any blooms this winter, and as for young plants in the spring, they would not do at all. If you want extra-size plants in the spring you can get them by taking a batch of cuttings from your inside plants early in November and by potting them on as they need it you can get them into 4-inch pots by May, and bushy plants, too. So don't waste your time on these toppings. A. F. J. Baur.

MASSACHUSETTS GARDENERS.

R. W. Patterson, of Lenox.

This is one of the newest places in Lenox. There are a fine lot of greenhouses constructed recently by the Pierson-Sefton Co., their "U" bar being used. This gives a maximum of light at all seasons; we thought it a little too glaring under a fierce July sun. A roomy span-roofed house to be used later for fruit trees in pots and tubs was filled with chrysanthemums, all very strong. Competition will undoubtedly be keen in Lenox this fall. Grapes fill one house and are carrying their first crop. Two divisions are occupied by nectarines and peaches, which were cropping nicely. Carnations were already housed. Several divisions were filled with melons. An imported variety which Mr. Proctor, the head gardener, has dubbed Caledonia, after his native land, is held in the highest favor. Orchids have two divisions, mostly cattleyas, with a number of Oncidium varicosum Rogersii and calanthes. Roses, palms, begonias, gloxinias, etc., were seen in other divisions. A very nice conservatory, carpeted and used as a sort of drawing-room at the mansion was arranged with a nice assortment of seasonable flowering and foliage plants. Mr. Proctor had everything in good shape on this estate.

W. D. Sloane, of Lenox.

This is the most extensive of the Lenox estates, about 100 hands being employed in the gardening and farm departments. There are some thirty greenhouses constructed three and a half years ago by Hitchings & Co., of the most up-to-date types. Palms and foliage plants, many of large size, occupy two large and lofty houses. Another is used as a stove house. Roses all looked in splendid condition. Several houses are devoted to them. Beauties were splendid. Liberty, five years old, was in grand shape. Quite a few Richmond are also being tried. Several other standard varieties are grown. Carnations are all grown inside and F. Heeremans, in charge of the garden department, G. T. Philcox being general estate superintendent, says this is far the best method of culture. Certainly all his plants looked remarkably vigorous, the best we had seen in our travels.

Gardenias are prime favorites. A batch of 1250 G. Veitchii had just been shifted into 4-inch pots and there were more to follow. As many as 300 blooms per day are sometimes cut in the height of the season. Crotons, dracænas, acalyphas, caladiums and other fine foliaged plants are grown in considerable numbers. Orchids occupy one house, cattleyas, Vanda cærulea, Oncidium varicosum Rogersii, phalænopsis, calanthes and cœlogynes being mostly grown. Chrysanthemums, grown to single stems, looked first-class. A house of grapes carried very fine bunches, Black Hamburg, Muscat of Hamburg, Muscat of Alexandria, Gros Maræ and Lady Downes' Seedling having splendid bunches. Two divisions were planted with nectarines and peaches, most of the first crop having been gathered. Figs are grown in pots and tubs and were fruiting freely, especially Negro Largo. Lister's Prolific was the favorite tomato under glass, carrying medium-size, firm fruit of a bright red color. Several houses are given up to melons. Emerald Gem and Nonsuch are the sorts grown. Mr. Heeremans considers the latter rather the better sort.

Very large quantities of annuals and perennials are grown for cutting. A big bed of Nicotiana Sanderæ in bloom did not fill one with enthusiasm for this novelty, but Mr. Heeremans stated that grown in large pots it had been found quite desirable for piazza use. The general impression in Lenox seemed to be that this plant and the Baby Rambler rose had both been much overrated.

Charles Lanier, of Lenox.

Most of the greenhouses on this estate have been quite recently reconstructed by the Pierson-Sefton Co. and are excellent growing houses. A division of chrysanthemums looked very vigorous. Carnations were all being grown inside and looked well. A roomy palm house contained some very healthy and well grown specimens. Quite a number of orchids are grown, cattleyas in the largest numbers. An extra fine lot of that useful summer variety, C. Harrisoniæ, were in bloom. Oncidium varicosum Rogersii, cypripediums and calanthes are also well grown. A house of nectarines and peaches contained a fine lot of fruit. These form an arch down the center of the house, making a delightfully shady promenade. There are also paths at the side of the house.

A. H. Wingett, the able and genial superintendent, has just laid out and planted a large new flower garden. Gruss an Teplitz rose looked splendid, being a scarlet mass of bloom. In the rose garden proper, Crimson Ramblers grown as standards fill one large bed, the Baby Ramblers being grown underneath. The latter again had a bad color and seemed more spidery than any other rose. Owing to the long and severe winters hybrid perpetual roses are not well done in Lenox, but the beds of hybrid teas and ramblers were great successes. The views from Mr. Lanier's mansion are the finest in Lenox, the panorama of mountain, lake and forest being enchanting.

H. H. Cook, of Lenox.

This was the last place we found time to visit and we were fortunate in finding the superintendent, Geo. H. Thompson, at home. Here, as elsewhere, chrysanthemums were well advanced, a big houseful looking first-class. Roomy houses are devoted to roses and carnations. Palms fill one large house. A good many orchids are grown, such as cattleyas, Odontoglossum grande, Oncidium varicosum Rogersii, etc. We did not note any plants of the beautiful Miltonia vexillaria at any of the places visited. It ought to be of special value there as a summer orchid. Grapes are well done here, such varieties as Barbarossa, Black Hamburg and Muscat of Alexandria carrying heavy crops. A house of nectarines and peaches was also over the average. A heated shed for bay trees, which are used in large numbers around the mansion, contained several hundred Lilium auratum and speciosum, which would soon be in bloom. Outdoors hollyhocks were especially fine and free from the disease which has discouraged so many from continuing their culture. All the newest sweet peas were seen in the large kitchen garden, Gladys Unwin showing up well.

MILWAUKEE PREMIUMS.

The Milwaukee Florists' Club has issued the preliminary list of premiums for its exhibition next November. In the list it is stated that "the following schedule of prizes, although limited in scope, and moderate in expenditure, is submitted with the assurance to all growers that the club is fully capable of supporting far more than the acceptance of any or all of the prizes here offered will obligate it to, and will therefore be pleased to encourage any worthy efforts of growers which may not be covered by the following. We will thank anyone who will acquaint the management with any opportunity of adding to the quality and variety. It will be our aim to have a show of quality rather than magnitude."

The list pretty well covers the usual field and should insure Milwaukee a good show. Those who wish copies of the list should address H. V. Hunkel, secretary, care of Holton & Hunkel Co.

SWEET PEA REVIEW.

The present season has not proven by any means an ideal one for sweet peas in the east. A lack of moisture from the start, and two weeks of intense heat in July, have proven too much for many of them, except where an abundant supply of water was at hand. Then again red spider has appeared in some places so badly as to practically destroy the crop. Still, on the whole, we cannot complain, for we have had a fair crop of those very popular annuals. They still retain their popularity as a market flower and the florist who is without them lacks one of the most necessary flowers for summer use.

While a few continue to sow rows of mixed colors, by far the larger portion find it to their interest to use separate colors, a few of the most popular shades, like pure white, bright pink, scarlet, lavender and primrose, being grown. The call for the dark shades is light. Having grown many of the leading standard varieties and novelties, and taken note of them as grown by one or two specialists, we append the result of our studies.

Whites.

For those needing a really good early blooming sort, Mont Blanc cannot well be omitted. A dwarf grower, it starts to flower when twelve inches high and lasts a long time in bloom, if seed pods are religiously removed. As between Dorothy Eckford and Blanche Burpee we prefer the former. It gives better stems, larger flowers and is fully as white as its parent. If confined to one white sweet pea for outdoor culture we would select the peerless Dorothy Eckford. Sadie Burpee is out of the running, as is the once popular Mrs. Sankey. Neither is pure white. Burpee's White Wonder has rather small flowers, but carries four, six or eight on a stem. We read of its having produced as many as twelve, but have not seen it carrying over nine.

"Boby" Schultz, Madison, N. J., Training His Pets.

Primrose.

Perhaps this color too nearly approaches white for some fanciers, still it is a delightful and popular color with ladies and great advancement has been made in this particular shade. We are still a considerable distance from a golden yellow color, but will undoubtedly obtain within a few years one of as pronounced a hue as Rudbeckia Golden Glow. For the past two seasons we have grown Hon. Mrs. Kenyon and find it decidedly the best of the primrose. In buff shades we note it has won all first prizes again this season at the English shows. Mrs. Eckford may be classed as its closest competitor. The old and original Primrose is now outclassed.

Blush Pink.

Some growers object to this shade as too nearly approaching white, still we do not know of any more taking shade for a table centerpiece. The two varieties, Duchess of Sutherland and Sensation, we consider the best, the advantage laying a little with the former. The Duchess is a wonderful bloomer, although it does not produce such strong stems, nor carry so many flowers to the stalk as such sorts as Prima Donna, Prince of Wales and other peas we might name. Modesty seems to be synonymous with Duchess of Sutherland.

Soft Pink.

The new Gladys Unwin we could place in the first position. It has proven itself a fine variety. Many of the stems have carried four flowers and the shade is a delightful Daybreak one. Prima Donna, which we have considered the best of this shade for several years, must take second place. It has proved a grand sort, producing vigorous haulm and fine stems. Mrs. K. Smith we have not yet grown, but it seems to be well to the fore in England. The new Countess Spencer is of a wonderfully sportive character. The type is deeper than Gladys Unwin and is a beautiful sort. This sweet pea promises to yield us some of the best sorts in the whole field. Katherine Tracy and Lovely do not compare with the sorts named.

Rose and Carmine.

Prince of Wales stands at the top of its class, bright rose-colored flowers on long, strong stems averaging three flowers, but frequently carrying four. Lord Roseberry, Mrs. Dugdale and Royal Rose are all good, but none of them equals Prince of Wales.

Orange Pink.

This is one of the most beautiful shades in existence and it is little wonder that it is a great seller in the markets. It is unfortunate that we have no early forcing variety of this shade, for it would be immensely popular. The varieties most commonly seen are Gorgeous, Lady Mary Currie and Miss Wilmott, the last named being the best, taking everything into consideration. Hon. F. Bouve Rie and Oriental should be dropped from the lists. Just now some grand sorts of something akin to orange-red colors are being introduced in England and are very popular. The variety Helen Lewis recently secured a first-class certificate and silver medal in London, being the best novelty of the season. It is a sport from Countess Spencer and was shown under other names by several other exhibitors. Evelyn Byatt, which secured an award of merit, is also well spoken of, while the new Henry Eckford promises to be a marvel. All the orange shaded sorts will burn to a greater or less extent in very hot weather and should not be allowed to remain on the vines after they are open, or much of their beauty will be lost.

Scarlet and Crimson.

A second trial of Scarlet Gem proves that this fine Eckford sort is worthless in America, all the flowers burning worse than any other sort we have grown. This is much to be regretted, as it comes much nearer to being a true scarlet than any other variety in commerce. King Edward VII, from the same eminent hybridist, of a darker shade, more nearly approaching crimson, is well adapted to our climate and is a distinct advance over such sorts as Mars and Salopian. The flowers are extra large and carried on splendid stems. Eckford's new Queen Alexandra, of a rather darker shade than Scarlet Gem, is said to be sunproof. We have not yet found any scarlet absolutely sunproof in America. When our temperature reaches, or even approximates, 90 degrees, it takes the color out of this particular shade.

Lavender and Mauve.

Nothing has yet appeared to displace Lady Grisel Hamilton. While Countess of Radnor and its improved form are still grown quite largely, they are hardly equal to the first named. Dorothy Tennant and Mrs. Walter Wright are good, but are hardly of so good a shade as Lady Grisel Hamilton. Tom Bolton is said to be a very fine new sort, approaching it in color, and was accorded an award of merit at the London sweet pea show.

Blue and Purple.

Navy Blue, with bluish purple standards and navy blue wings, retains its lead in this class, Captain of the Blues being its nearest competitor. This shade is too dark for most flower fanciers but still there is a moderate call for it in some places.

Claret, Magenta and Maroon.

None of these colors is very popular. Black Knight, maroon; George Gordon, magenta, and Othello, dark chocolate, are the best of their respective shades.

Striped Varieties.

While less popular than the self-colored sorts, some of these are quite pleasing. Nearly all are very floriferous. Burpee's selection of Earliest of All cannot be excelled for early blooming, as it comes ahead of all other varieties. For forcing purposes also it is the finest sort grown. America, striped red and white, is still one of the best. Aurora, salmon and white, is also good. Gracie Greenwood, bluish white edged with pink, is a fine thing and Agnes Johnston, one of last season's novelties, promises to be well in the front another season. Lottie Eckford is the best in the blue and white class.

We are glad to notice a tendency to reduce the number of varieties in some American catalogues. Far too many are still listed, some of which ought to be relegated to oblivion. We presume there will still be a demand for them as long as they are catalogued and if seedsmen feel they must continue to carry them they might give a selection of, say, a dozen sorts, the very best of their respective shades. This would be a great help to many buyers of this popular flower.

Our best dozen to cover the various shades would be as follows: Dorothy Eckford, Hon. Mrs. Kenyon, Duchess of Sutherland, King Edward VII, Miss Wilmott, Gladys Unwin, Countess Spencer, Prince of Wales, Lady Grisel Hamilton, Navy Blue, Othello and Gracie Greenwood. Specialist.

COAL MARKET BRACING UP.

"While western coal markets are not yet in the position which they should occupy either as to the volume of tonnage demanded or the range of prices," says the Black Diamond, "there has been a slight improvement during the last week, which, if it is an indication of better things with the development of the season, should be a source of encouragement. The principal increase in the volume of tonnage required has come from points outside of Chicago and other large cities. Country trade, so-called, is becoming a more important factor and gives promise of developing to good proportions inside of the next thirty to sixty days. Both bituminous and anthracite have felt the influence of the better conditions."

Vegetable Forcing.

CUCUMBERS.

The roots of cucumber plants are soft and easily broken, so care should be taken to pot them up before they become in any way pot-bound, in which condition the roots will cling to the sides of the pot and are sure to be broken in turning them out. The plants thus robbed of their main support are sure to receive more or less of a setback. This clinging of the roots to the side of the pot can be avoided to a considerable degree by having the pots perfectly clean inside at potting. It takes a little time to wash them but it pays in the end to have them washed for all the shifts necessary.

Cucumbers like a free, open soil, so that a good turfy mixture should be provided for them and what manure is used in the soil should be well decomposed but not too finely broken. Ample drainage should also be provided so that the water will pass through freely.

The plants are liable to be attacked by thrips, even at an early stage, so it is a good plan to put a small stake to each plant as soon as they are large enough to be tied up. This allows of their being syringed without danger of breaking, but as the foliage is soft and easily lacerated the water must not be played on with too much force. If carefully and frequently done, syringing is the best means of keeping both thrips and red spiders in check, also, as a precaution against their attacks it is a good plan to spread tobacco stems over the bench around the pots. If they are standing on soil the tobacco stems would rot pretty soon, as they would be kept damp all the time, so that an empty bench is the best place and, if this cannot be conveniently provided, place boards over the soil and set the plants on these. Apart from preventing the rooting of the tobacco stems the boards provide the two-fold advantage of helping to dry the plants quicker and insure against stagnation, and preventing worms from working up into the pots and stopping the drainage. The plants should have full exposure to light and plenty of air, and should be kept growing as freely as possible.

Now is the time to procure a good foundation on which to build up a good plant and later on insure a profitable crop. Neglect now is but courting disappointment and probably failure later on. W. S. Croydon.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

There is a slight improvement in business, some days showing considerable activity. This is due, perhaps, to the fact that there is more stock coming in, but the demand in most cases still is greater than the supply. In some lines there is a small over-supply but very little stock goes to waste. Gladioli sell more slowly than is usual. Storemen report that the public does not take very kindly to them, consequently the price is down.

Asters have the call and the supply is much greater than last week. Some of the wholesalers are already cutting prices. The best quality moves somewhat better. Roses are perhaps a little more plentiful but mostly of very poor quality. A few are being cut from young stock. There are scarcely any carnations and, though the quality is fierce, they sell quickly.

ASTERS DISEASED.

For the past two or three years I have been losing all my asters. When about three inches high they commence to wilt near the roots and die. I have planted them in different soil each year, but to no avail. Will you kindly let me know the cause and remedy?

J. P. R.

We know of no disease that troubles asters when they are only three inches high. They are as large as that before removing from the flats to the field and we presume that J. P. R. is losing them after planting out. When nearly full grown, or about ready to bloom, we have in some years lost a good many plants, although our loss would not be over five per cent. The whole plant wilted and died, and many of them were strong, robust plants until they showed signs of wilting. We pulled up many and looked for the trouble. The roots appeared strong and healthy. Up through the main stem in the center was a small black streak, but not eaten by anything we could detect. Doubtless this was the cause of the plant collapsing, but of its cause or prevention we

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The receipts of asters have very materially increased in the last few days, with a more or less depressing effect on the market. There are not so many really good asters and these bring fair prices, but the ordinary stuff has been sold as low as 5 cents a bunch and it has naturally hurt the sale of all other stock, except the best grades, which continue to be actively sought for. There are very few carnations which will serve ordinary purposes and those which are at all good are still selling well. Outdoor stuff is not wanted. Gladioli are very abundant and dahlias are coming.

Beauty prices continue considerably above the average summer level. Qualities are good. The rose market shows little change, but probably no advance can be looked for until the quality of the new crop has had a chance to improve. Lilies are quite plentiful, including Harrisii, auratum, rubrum and album and a few speciosum lilies are seen, but are hard to sell. Green goods continue to be received in quantity beyond the possibility of selling out clean.

The market is probably now at its lowest ebb for the summer. City trade is very light. Demand from New Orleans has been curtailed by the embargo placed on business by the yellow fever scare.

Wholesale Funeral Work.

For nearly a year E. C. Amling has had a note in the price list which he mails to his trade, informing out-of-town florists that he will make up any kind of cut flower work and deliver in Chicago or ship as directed. The result has been that he has added a profitable department to his business. A great many of his customers send him orders for delivery in Chicago and many more, instead of sending for materials for a funeral piece, order the piece shipped completed.

Various Notes.

G. L. Grant reached Chicago July 27, on his way to the S. A. F. convention, but was met by word that his son, Walter, was among those killed by the explosion on the Bennington, which had occurred after Mr. Grant left home. He started on the return journey at once. Walter Grant joined the Bennington only the day before the accident.

The Catholic Order of Foresters and twenty-four persons and corporations are named as defendants in a bill filed in the United States District Court by Trustee Edwin C. Day, who is in charge of the estate of Michael Winandy. Several thousands of dollars' worth of real estate and debts amounting to $23,340 are involved in the suit and it is asked that the transfer of the property to the Catholic organization and to other creditors of the bankrupt be declared void, as well as the issuance of an injunction restraining all of the defendants from further interference with the property.

E. B. Washburn, son of C. L. Washburn, won the members' cup and gold medal in the Hinsdale golf tournament. He also captured the month's handicap trophy. Young Mr. Washburn is to go into the business of Bassett & Washburn after a course at the Agricultural College at Madison.

The retailers are unanimous in their reports of very light business, in spite of which they are compelled to keep up appearances and retain their men, whom they hope soon to need. The Wienhoeber Co. reports thirteen employes on the pay roll, certainly an unlucky number when there is nothing doing.

The A. Dietsch Co. reports this the best season in its history. They will have a new factory before another year. Fred Dietsch will attend the convention.

On another page of this issue is a reproduction of a photograph taken at the annual picnic of the Geo. Wittbold Co.'s employes at Edgebrook July 22. The photograph shows some sixty-nine people and six of the staff were unable to be present. Louis Wittbold, secretary of the company, will attend the convention.

Quite a number of the growers are slow about benching carnations because the growth of the plants has been retarded by cool, wet weather.

A. C. Kohlbrand has returned from a two weeks' vacation spent at his old home in Cincinnati.

Vaughan & Sperry are handling some nice Cochet roses.

Peter Reinberg, P. J. Foley and John Schillo returned last evening from a two weeks' trip to Yellowstone park.

N. J. Wietor and family are at home from an outing at Cedar Lake.

Weiland & Risch are cutting Killarney rose. It sells well although nowhere near in its winter form.

George Reinberg reports a fine call for field-grown carnation plants.

E. F. Winterson Co. is handling lancifolium lilies cut with short stems. They sell well and are fine for funeral work.

John Zech is taking his vacation a couple of days at a time, spending them where florists are thickest.

Among recent visitors were: J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati, with samples of Lorraine begonias; E. T. Oldham, Palestine, Ill., on vacation; H. W. Buckbee and Mr. Kline, Rockford, Ill.; Miss Barbara, daughter of John R. Hellenthal, Columbus, O.; Miss Hayden, of Samuel Murray's, Kansas City.

BOSTON.

The Market.

There is no material change in the market since our last report. American Beauties are coming in of good quality and are bringing rather better prices. Very few Brides and Maids arriving now are of any value, but excellent Kaiserins arrive from several growers. Carnots also are seen of good quality. Carnations sell a little better. A few have made up to $2 and good stock has averaged $1 to $1.50. Asters are more plentiful and white varieties sell quite well. Gladioli is also more abundant. Sweet peas have improved a little with the cooler weather, but the stems are still very short, it being necessary to cut the haulm with the flowers to make presentable bunches. Lily of the valley holds its own, as does adiantum and other green stock.

Florists' Club Picnic.

As already briefly reported, the club picnic on July 25 was a great success. Weather conditions were perfect and the attendance of the members, their families and friends was nearly 250. The day was too short for many. The boat races were abandoned for lack of time and foot races substituted.

The baseball game made it apparent that the men were not in it with the boys and it was something of a relief to the former when time was called. The cricket contest came late in the day, but seemed to excite more enthusiasm than the ball game. Many of those playing had not handled a bat for fifteen to twenty years, but it seemed to come quite natural to them. Both teams were out in fifty minutes, pretty nearly a world's record we should judge. The score was: Palmer's team, 31; Wheeler's team, 35. A full list of sports and winners is appended:

Picnic Pickings.

Too bad M. H. Norton did not enter in the 200-pound class also. He would have given President Wheeler a close calk.

Charles Sander, owing to an injury to an eye, could not attend. We missed him.

No amount of coaxing would induce Alexander Montgomery to judge the babies. We were fortunate in having a judge who would soon be 1,000 miles away.

We were glad to see some of the Old Guard present and to hear them say they were having a good time.

W. A. Roberts, the proprietor of the grove, informed us that the Gardeners' and Florists' Club people were a superior class and the best behaved he had ever seen. We were out of cigars at the time, but promised to remember him later.

W. J. Collins, who won W. E. Doyle's handsome silver cup in the club members' race, is one of David Weir's boys. He also secured a pair of cuff links, silver match safe, pocket compass, shaving set and two scarf stickpins, enough glory for one day.

"Never felt so stiff and lame in all my life," was the verdict of not a few of the athletes the rest of the week.

We would liked to have seen a race between the presidents of the S. A. F., Rose Society and Carnation Society. No time to push it through.

One result of the picnic was several applications for membership. It looks like 200 members by December 31.

W. A. Riggs proved an efficient starter and a first-class hammer-thrower. Robert Cameron officiated acceptably at the other end of the course. Mr. Cameron had a nasty knock on the side of the face from a baseball during the afternoon.

Sorry J. W. Duncan did not win anything. He tried hard, but his feet seemed to be in the way. Much credit is due him, however, for the success of the sports.

W. H. Elliott jumped on those who asked him to run in the veterans' class. The asparagus king is still quite a little on the sunny side of 50.

Various Notes.

H. H. Barrows & Son will show Nephrolepis Barrowsii at Washington, also a new nephrolepis entirely distinct from any yet introduced, which they class as an absolutely perfect sort. They have experienced such a heavy demand for ferns that they are constantly some thousands behind in filling orders.

It looks now like a good delegation to Washington. Wm. H. Elliott is working hard to secure a good showing for Massachusetts and we hope he will succeed.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society visited the vegetable gardens of the Taunton Lunatic Hospital in charge of Edward Parker on July 28. These were found in splendid condition.

John Ash, of Pomfret Center, Conn., one of our prominent Boston exhibitors, sailed from New York on July 29 for a five weeks' vacation in England.

A welcome rain started in on the evening of July 29 and one or two succeeding days have been showery, ending in some measure one of the worst droughts we have had in late years. Several inches more rain would be acceptable to thoroughly soak the land and start the springs running.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society visited the estate of Commodore M. F. Plant, Groton, Conn., on August 2 to inspect an herbaceous garden and vegetable garden. The estate is also entered for the Hunnewell triennial premium.

A. Leuthy & Co. are busy installing a new boiler and building new chimneys. They report stock for next season as being in fine shape. W. N. CRAIG.

Boston to Washington.

It has been arranged that parties wishing to go in company to the Washington convention from Boston and eastern New England may take the Providence boat line on Sunday, August 13, arriving in New York in time to join the party from that city, which leaves at 10:55 a. m. Monday over the Pennsylvania railroad. The Providence line train connecting with boat leaves Boston at 6:22 p. m. In purchasing ticket be sure to have it read over the Pennsylvania railroad and ask for a certificate for the Society of American Florists' convention. These tickets may be purchased not earlier than Friday, August 11. Parties desiring staterooms on the boat may have them reserved for them by sending application therefor to W. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass., or Wm. J. Stewart, 11 Hamilton place, Boston. Price of stateroom is $1 or $2, according to location.

From western points in New England states the most direct route will be by rail route via Hartford and New Haven. Those desiring to travel in company should write to Theodore Wirth or John Coombs, Hartford, Conn., who will give particulars regarding party to be made up at that city. WM. J. STEWART.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The conditions at the wholesale houses and among the retail trade remain about the same as reported last week, only that a little more funeral work was made up at the different stores. First-class stock still sells, especially Beauties and white roses. Kaiserin is much in demand, as are long Beauties. There are plenty of short grades that do not sell any too well.

Carnations vary in price. The bulk of the shipments are not of first-class stock, most of them being field-grown. Sweet peas have let up somewhat, and they are not of the best quality, with hardly any value. Asters are very fine and abundant, many more coming in than can be sold, with prices ranging from 35 cents to $1.50 per hundred. White and purple have the most demand. The wholesalers say that by the end of the present week they look for a great glut, unless increased business alters the situation.

Valley is exceptionally fine. Tuberoses and gladioli are quite plentiful. There was quite a fine batch of swainsona seen the past week, which went finely in funeral work. There is also the usual abundance of herbaceous stock in the market. All kinds of greens can be had.

Various Notes.

Next Thursday afternoon the St. Louis Florists' Club will hold the most important meeting of the year and every member of the club should be present. The annual election of officers is of great importance to us all and this alone should bring out the entire membership. This meeting will be held in Odd Fellows building promptly at 2 p. m.

Misses Tillie and Birdie Meinhardt left last week for an extended trip through the east. They will be in Washington during the S. A. F. meeting. Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Meinhardt will wait and go with the St. Louis delegation.

J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, was with us last week, with fine samples of plants. Mr. Peterson reports a fine trade.

Mrs. J. F. Windt and daughter, who have been traveling east this summer, are expected home this week. Then it is Rude's turn to take his vacation.

Mr. and Mrs. Weber and Theo. Miller will start for home, leaving Hamburg August 3, arrive in New York August 13, and from there go to Washington to attend the convention and meet the St. Louis delegation. Messrs. Weber and Miller are members of the team that will represent St. Louis in the bowling contest.

Vennemann Bros. are building three new greenhouses at Kirkwood, for carnations and violets.

The place formerly owned by Max Herzog is being demolished and by August 1 Mr. Meyer will have the entire belongings of his place at Kirkwood, when the houses will be rebuilt at once.

By the time the fall season begins three new firms will open on South Grand avenue.

B. Eschner, representing M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, made business calls on the local trade the past week.

Quite a number of 1905 S. A. F. pins were conspicuously worn among the boys at the wholesale houses on Saturday morning.

Frank F. Fillmore, Jr., and Miss Lydia Gabler were married on Tuesday of last week. They are now snugly settled in their new home, 3310 Meramec street. The happy couple were in receipt of many valuable presents from their friends.

The transportation committee reports that it has twenty-three names on its list of those who are going to Washington. On the list, I am glad to state, are seven ladies. If anyone has neglected to send in his name he should do so at once, to J. J. Beneke, on or before the next club meeting, which will be held next Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. M. M. Ayers is renovating her place on Grand avenue, making necessary improvements for the fall trade. Mrs. Ayers has bought a fine country place, covering sixteen acres on which are 600 fruit trees.

Judge McDonald has entered a decree under which the board of trustees of the Missouri Botanic Garden can lease or sell any property held under the will of the late Henry Shaw.

George Waldbart is making extensive improvements at his place. Repainting and other work will make the establishment look fine for the fall trade.

Arnold Ringier, of W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, is in the city this week.

The florist bowlers have only one more practice night, on next Monday, as they leave on Sunday night, August 13, for Washington. The team at Washington will include J. J. Beneke, C. A. Kuehn, Fred Meinhardt, F. C. Weber, Frank M. Ellis and Henry Lohrenz. Seven games were rolled last Monday night, with the following averages: Beneke, 173; Kuehn, 162; Ellis, 156; Lohrenz, 152; Beyer, 151; R. Meinhardt, 146; F. H. Meinhardt, 119. J. J. B.

DETROIT.

The Breitmeyer Cornerstone.

A most unique event occurred on July 29, when the Detroit Florists' Club laid the cornerstone of the new Breitmeyer building, unique because I do not believe history will furnish another instance of a body of business men laying the cornerstone of a structure built by a competitor. At 5 p. m. the florists assembled to the number of ninety-three and proceeded to the new building, where upon a platform were seated the members of the firm, together with their families and the officers of the club. Mr. Barnett introduced J. F. Sullivan, who read a very interesting history of the rise of the firm and then introduced Robert Watson, president of the club, who made the following address:

Brother florists and fellow craftsmen: So much has been said to you by our secretary, Mr. Sullivan, that there is little left for me to say. I am pleased, however, to be with the Detroit Florists' Club on this occasion. Never in the history of the florists' industry in our city, or any other city within this great Republic, has such a grand structure been reared to the florists' industry. And well may the Detroit Florists' Club be proud today to have the honor of meeting here this afternoon to lay this cornerstone. Within the cornerstone are deposited the constitution and by-laws of the Detroit Florists' Club, a full list of the members of the club, the La Detroit rose, autographs of the Florists' Club's members, copies of the Detroit daily papers, a photograph of building as it is today, a photograph of John Breitmeyer, and various coins of the present day, photograph of the old building and a photograph of the building when complete.

Away back in the early seventies, out on Mack avenue, John Breitmeyer built two small greenhouses as the starting point, steadily progressing until he gained the reputation of being the leading florist in Michigan. Only a few years ago he retired to private life and left his stupendous business in the hands of his sons, who have still kept to the front. We honor these men as members of our club; we honor them as leaders in our profession, and we honor them as good and enterprising citizens.

In behalf of the Detroit Florists' Club I hereby proclaim to the people here assembled that the cornerstone of the Breitmeyer building has been well and truly laid.

This completed the formal ceremonies, after which the florists, the architects and builders of the structure repaired to Harmony hall, where a Dutch lunch was spread. Then trouble commenced for the ex-presidents of the club, for all were required to talk for the amusement and edification of those assembled and a general good time was had, the president of the club acting as toast-master, with his inimitable Scotch.

One of the most pleasant features of the event was the presentation by Mr. Sullivan of the silver trowel used in the laying of the stone to Philip Breitmeyer as the oldest of the family, and for once genial Phil was done for, as he completely failed to respond, being too full for utterance at that moment, but rallied later and did nobly. The inscription on the trowel read "Detroit Florists' Club to John Breitmeyer's Sons, used to lay the cornerstone of the Breitmeyer building, July 29, 1905."

Various Notes.

The delegation to the S. A. F. meeting from here will not be very large but it will be an enthusiastic one. They will probably number from twelve to fifteen.

Ed. Beard, one of the ex-presidents of the club, says it is one box of cigars for a boy and two for a girl, and so will see that there are two boxes at the next meeting of the club. Mother and daughter are doing finely.

PORT ALLEGANY, PA.

The Port Allegany Greenhouses have taken on quite a new appearance under the management and ownership of Mrs. M. E. G. Ventres, who assumed control May 29. She has had the place cleaned up, a neat walk built in front of the greenhouses and bedding plants set out the entire length and a new coat of white adorns the houses, making a most noticeable improvement. She has recently secured the services of Emil Gahnig, of Germany, who has the roses, carnations, chrysanthemums and other stock in fine shape.

Mrs. Ventres is building a pretty two-story dwelling a few steps from the greenhouses, which she will occupy and will rent her Church street home. Judging from appearances the Port Allegany Greenhouses were never in so prosperous a condition as at present and Mrs. Ventres is receiving many compliments from visitors. J. D.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Business has reached its summer level and, with the exception of an occasional wedding and small social function, there is practically nothing doing. Funeral work of late has been pretty lively, some stores being very busy. Good stock of any kind, with the possible exception of Kaiserin, is practically unobtainable. There is nothing at all in carnations, while asters are beginning to come in. They are quite small and short-stemmed. The recent showers will improve outdoor stock and help to relieve the present shortage. Auratum and lancifolium lilies are in fair supply, with a good demand.

Various Notes.

Vacations are now in order among the store men and many are spending pleasant hours along the seashore. The growers, on the other hand, are very busy, some rebuilding and others making extensive improvements.

Jas. Eadie is in the midst of building operations. Seven new houses and a handsome dwelling are this year's acquisitions.

The Ohio Floral Co. is erecting a house of the latest design and costing $2,000, for their new foreman, M. Bloy; also a new flower cellar. This concern does not contemplate building additional houses this year, as heretofore reported, but will plan for next season.

The Essex Greenhouses are building several new benches with tile bottoms for Beauties.

The Gasser Co. is very busy planting carnations, the stock being extra fine.

Bate Bros. have planted several benches of carnations from pots and are well pleased with results thus far.

Mr. Eastwell has just returned from a sojourn in Detroit. He says he is booking several weddings for early fall.

Frank Smith will spend several weeks in the east, visiting New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Atlantic City.

E. Fetters, for many years connected with the firm of Smith & Fetters, is paying us a visit from Detroit. His many friends will be very glad to see him.

M. F. Harrison, manager of the Ohio Floral Co., reports funeral trade very brisk.

The Cleveland Florists' Club will hold its annual picnic at Geisen's (eighteen sneezes) Gardens, Pearl street, August 2. A good time is expected.

FOREST CITY.

BUFFALO.

Various Jottings.

We don't expect any business in July and August, so the present quiet time is not disappointing. Asters, gladioli and sweet peas are the principal flowers offered. Carnations are at their lowest.

We are glad to say Louis H. Neubeck is again back at his office after a long and painful illness.

There has been little talk about the convention and yet we believe there will be a good representation from this city and vicinity. We understand Mr. McClure has his clan marshalled to carry off some of the bowling trophies. From what we read, and still more from what we remember of the former conventions, this coming convention should be missed by no one who has the privilege to be a guest. There was more hospitality to the hour at the first Washington convention than we ever remember and it was served up in variety to suit all tastes. In the rear of the American Rose Co.'s store, in a rustic shed, was something of a rotund appearance with a lump of ice on the top and there many of the veterans put in a continuous session, enlivened most of the time by the stirring Scottish songs of Archie Middlemass, of Milwaukee. Then there was that unique vaudeville performance in the store of the same company, with Constable John Thorpe to keep order. From this impromptu but enjoyable little affair up to the splendid entertainment on some spacious lawn, with the Marine band to charm us, it was one round of pleasure. There is only one Washington and all should see it, for there are many things there that cannot be seen elsewhere.

We hope, with all the pleasures and sight seeing in store for us, that the business of the convention will receive good attendance and attention. I have watched a good many conventions of different organizations and societies and our florists' conventions will compare most favorably with any of them for real work and business. We stick to the object of our meetings very well. At first we were inclined to make it a four-day picnic, but for the past ten years that has been largely eliminated and the majority of attendants go there to take an earnest interest in all that is said and done.

How much we owe to the dear old society! It is the parent of our local societies; it is the mother of our floricultural press; it is the means of knowing our brother and sister florists, and what a poor lot we would be if it were not for our wide acquaintance! Last year at St. Louis one old baldheaded sport, in presenting some bowling trophies, said that the man who only came to the conventions to talk cannas and geraniums was no good. That was entirely wrong. Those earnest men are the backbone, the pillars of the society. The bowling and shooting are the exerescence, or, I should rather say, the effervescence, harmless enough, but they should not interfere with the business of the convention. I look for a great and glorious time and, my fellow townsmen, you who have not seen the beautiful city or tasted of the hospitality of the Washington florists, you will sadly miss it if you do not go. Washington is full of Gude and Freeman! You don't know them until you meet them at home. W. S.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Summer dullness prevails. To accept the inevitable cheerfully is good philosophy. No one will feel disappointed if there is not a ripple on the placid sea until September. But the same quiet expectancy is evident that precedes a general shaking up of the dry bones. The surplus energy of all is gathering force and the new season will find all hands alert and ready for the best year the floricultural world of New York has ever experienced. Prosperity abounds, millionaries are multiplying. There are good times coming.

Everything nowadays is scarce except asters and gladioli. This is their day and they dominate everywhere. Even the retail windows have little else and manage to make quite a creditable showing with these modest flowers and Scottii fern. Everybody uses Scottii. It is a fine keeper and will have a big sale this winter.

Roses and carnations are not only scarce, but largely inferior, short-stemmed, small-headed and altogether unsatisfactory. The supply of orchids is at a low ebb and will grow less until the end of August. Newport wants everything good which the New York demand does not absorb.

Various Notes.

It has been decided by the transportation committee that the New York special will go to the convention via the Pennsylvania railroad Monday, August 14, at 10:55 a. m., Twenty-third street ferry. The fare is $8.80 to Washington and return.

We have ordered a special brand of comfortable temperature for the convention. We are all counting on Brother Gude making good. He has promised something out of the ordinary in weather and has a reputation for veracity. We are going 100 strong and more to follow. Almost 100 are booked and dozens who are going have not yet sent their names to Secretary Young. This is hardly fair to the commissary department, and to themselves. Some have the notion membership in the S. A. F. or the New York Florists' Club is necessary before the advantages of the special train are available. This is not so. Everybody is welcome and if the decision to become members of these organizations should later materialize, so much the better. It is an honor to have membership in either of them.

Arthur C. Dacre, with Young & Nugent, leaves this week for his annual rest in the Catskills. This firm had charge of the decorations last week at the Japanese club, at the dinner given in honor of Baron Kamura, and will have an elaborate floral display at the grand reception this week, when every Japanese of note in the country will be here to "Banzai" for his country and its eminent representatives.

M. A. Bowe and family are automobiling in Jersey with headquarters at Asbury Park. Mr. Bowe and his employes will enjoy a short dinner together at Newport next Sunday, a happy innovation.

Lion & Wertheimer have a whole room engaged at the exhibition hall in Washington for their extensive exhibit, where chairs, writing materials and other conveniences for their customers and others may be found during the convention. Their specialty will be lace effects in chiffons, but they will have a liberal display of everything choice and novel in the ribbon line.

H. H. Berger & Co. report exceptional quality in Harrisii this season, and a big demand. This firm is adding to its facilities for a much enlarged trade and will be represented by a fine exhibit at the Washington convention.

Elliott & Sons are now comfortably settled in their new home on Fulton street and in ship-shape for the fall business. Their double floors for the auction department is a new departure and with elevator facilities everything for the convenience of their customers is up-to-date. They report a big business on Captain's Island Harrisii and Roman hyacinths are in to add to their activities.

A unique decoration at Newport last week was at an affair given by Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish. Each table had an immense mound of white flowers as a center-piece, from which arose a large floral umbrella. Each rib was outlined in green and flowers, producing a most charming effect. Artificial trellises in the immense halls were covered with bloom, great masses of blue hydrangeas adding to the beauty of the ensemble.

All the New York florists at Newport now report the season in full swing, with dinners innumerable and great expectations for a brilliant summer.

J. K. Allen's headquarters is becoming a great matrimonial center. The record of three weddings in a year will hardly be equaled on the street. A couple of weeks ago the faithful bookkeeper of half a score of years, Miss Riley, became Mrs. Bohlman. Her husband is a wholesale and retail florist at Broadway and Gates avenue, Brooklyn. Mrs. Bohlman will continue at the office until Easter. On Monday of this week the veteran's son, George James Allen, married Miss Caroline Rossler and will spend his honeymoon among the Long Island watering places.

Our prophesy that E. G. Hill would not find Europe sufficiently attractive to hold him beyond convention time was fulfilled by his return last week on the Campania. Mrs. Hill accompanied him.

John Birnie is also back from Scotland.

George Saltford is enjoying the cooler air of northern New York, as usual during August.

A. J. Guttman and family are at Ellenville, in central New York.

Phil Kessler has the sympathy of his many friends in the serious illness of his father, who suffered a stroke of paralysis lately.

Warren B. Craw and William Duckham are among the late voyagers to the old country and the end is not yet.

The Burnham-Hitchings-Pierson Co.'s offices on Broadway are a busy center these days. The amalgamation of these great enterprises is developing an enormous business. J. Austin Shaw.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

Cut flowers of all kinds are rather scarce, with practically no demand, with the exception of a little funeral work, which helps along. At the present time the craft is paying more attention to convention matters than to business.

Various Notes.

The growers are getting ready to bench carnations. C. A. Shaffer, in Alexandria, has his houses planted with carnations and his stock is doing well. The establishments of Minder Bros., J. R. Freeman, J. L. Loose and Gude Bros. never looked better.

Recent visitors in the city are Fred Michell, J. C. Vaughan, Edwin Seidewitz and Phil Hauswirth.

Otto Bauer is very seriously ill and has been sent to the hospital, suffering with typhoid fever. He has the sympathy of his many friends.

Frank Slye and J. C. Powell have returned after spending several weeks in the mountains.

There was a meeting of the Florists' Club Monday night to complete all arrangements for the convention. From all indications this promises to be the banner convention in the history of the society. Vice-President Freeman, with the aid of the committees, has worked hard to make this a successful convention. Supt. Cooke has sold all available space and claims the exhibits will far surpass any previous convention. Chairman Ernest has closed all contracts pertaining to bowling and promises the boys a big time. The alleys secured for the occasion are second to none. F. H. K.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Market conditions have changed for the worse. Flowers are more plentiful, while the demand has fallen off. The chief feature is the increase in the number of asters, now arriving freely in all colors. The buyers are not nearly so partial to these early blooms as they are to the larger Semple's, which are expected soon. Gladioli are at their height. Lilium album, rubrum and roseum are found at the Leo Niessen Co. Summer Beauties from local growers improve during the cooler weather. Myers & Samtman are cutting freely.

Various Notes.

Harry Bayersdorfer, the merchant prince of this city, returned last week after a ten weeks' visit to Europe, bringing in his train many choice novelties, some of them to be shown to his friends at the convention. He states that the European manufacturers are working full time in anticipation of increased duty to go into effect next January.

J. Stern has returned from Europe, where he has been securing desirable supplies for next fall's business.

Frank Polites has leased the store in the Hazeltine building, Chestnut street above Broad, formerly occupied by Charles P. Poryzees. He will open for business in September. It is stated that William Thompson will assist him.

Robert A. Stewart has given up his store on Thirteenth street, above Walnut, and leased a store half a block south on the same street, which he will open in September.

Mrs. Sarah I. Smith, of Secane, is building a fine new greenhouse for carnations and violets.

Mrs. Eison, of Columbus, S. C., was a visitor at M. Rice & Co.'s a few days ago.

Samuel Lilley, the popular representative of Eugene Rice, is handling some very fine summer Brides and Maids.

The street has it that Horace T. Dumont and Wm. P. Craig will embark in the retail florists' business.

H. L. Blind, of Pittsburg, was a visitor in this city recently.

The Leo Niessen Co. reports its July business to be way ahead of any previous season.

Clarence J. Watson, with S. S. Pennock, has returned from his vacation.

W. J. Sherry, of Johnson & Stokes, reports an excellent demand for pansy and other flower seeds.

The Keller Pottery Co., of Norristown, Pa., has taken full advantage of its splendid shipping facilities. It has successfully shipped pots as far south as Central America and as far west as Idaho.

Edw. Reid says: "When you see a chap east of Broad street who is looking for good flowers, just whisper Horace Greeley's advice to young men."

Don't forget that Commodore John Westcott, president of our florists' club, cordially invites every delegate to the Washington convention who can make it convenient to join his party in Broad street station on Tuesday morning, August 15. Exact train time will be given next week.

William R. Gibson has resigned his position with Pennock Bros. and accepted a position elsewhere.

Bowling.

Now that the great annual bowling tournament of the S. A. F. (must I add O. H.? You know what that stands for) is near, it is no longer possible for me to keep silent about our bowlers and allow the players from other cities to fancy that Philadelphia is asleep and that they will win all the trophies. Twelve of our best bowlers, the pick of the club, the creme de la creme of our talent, have just completed a tournament of five series of three games, fifteen games in all, divided between home and outside for the six places, five regular and one substitute, on our team. When the players from the other cities look over the averages below I think they will agree with me that their teams will have to watch the Quaker boys:

Player.	Games.	Total.	Av.
D. T. Connor	12	2,280	190
Geo. M. Moss	12	2,177	181
Frank Polites	15	2,478	165
W. N. Yates	12	1,957	163
Geo. Craig	15	2,357	157
I. H. Dodds	15	2,317	154
Geo. Anderson	15	2,299	153
J. P. Habermehl	15	2,257	150
W. K. Harris	15	2,257	150
G. C. Watson	15	2,236	149
John Westcott	12	1,672	139
Wm. Robertson	6	964	160

D. T. Connor averaged 207 in the three games rolled on the Casino alleys. Wm. Robertson was unable to finish his games, owing to an injury. He may roll the others later. PHIL.

HANCOCK, MICH.—A. L. York and Mrs. Fannie Rule, of Ripley, were married at Calumet July 27. Mr. York is the son of the well known florist, M. A. York.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Ordinary summer business has been the routine during the last week and none of the retail men has anything startling to report. Asters are coming in plentifully, especially white. Gladioli are coming in considerable quantity, as are also sweet peas and other outdoor stock. Dahlias are arriving slowly and but little good stock has yet been in the market. Of carnations there is not much to be said, as the supply is pretty well off. The Mitchell Nursery Co., of Mitchell, is sending in about the best that are seen. Roses, with the exception of Kaiserin, are small and of poor quality.

Various Notes.

A. J. Jennings, manager of the floral department of the T. Eaton Co., has just returned from Winnipeg, where he put up a decoration for their opening, similar to the one he put up here for Easter. Tom Manton, of Manton Bros., took a car-load of palms out for the occasion but has not yet returned. Mr. Jennings informs us that Mr. Manton had quite an experience traveling that distance in an open car. His first trouble was around the northern shores of Lake Superior, where he had a number of his palms touched with frost. After arriving in Winnipeg he had the misfortune of having the ripe oranges stolen off his orange tree while same was being unloaded in the yards. We presume that picking oranges off the trees is not an everyday experience to the boys in Winnipeg and they consequently availed themselves of the opportunity.

H. G. Dillemuth, of Dunlop's, is off on two weeks' vacation.

J. S. Simmons spent Saturday and Sunday in Buffalo.

Chas. Tidy, of S. Tidy & Sons, is off on a month's fishing trip to the northern lakes.

H. E. Philpott, of Winnipeg, who has lately sold out his business there, has been spending the last couple of weeks visiting acquaintances in Toronto. He intends accompanying the Toronto delegation to the convention at Montreal.

Miller & Son, of Bracondale, are putting up a new Beauty house. Mr. Miller informs me that there will be no scarcity of Beauties in another year.

We had a call during the week from Dr. Ree, of the Georgetown Floral Co. He reports everything promising in that locality and predicts a busy winter.

Among the recent visitors were: G. Stevens, of Darch & Hunter, and Wm. Gammage, of J. Gammage & Son, London. They were attending Grand Lodge meeting of the Masons at Hamilton, and gave us a flying visit. We also had a call from R. Harper, of Hamilton, who reports a very successful season's business and, although business is quiet now, he feels the lull is very acceptable, giving him time to straighten up stock and repaint his greenhouses.

We expect the delegation from Toronto to the convention will be large.

Edward Tyrrell died July 18 from sunstroke. Mr. Tyrrell took a very active interest in horticulture and was for a number of years president of the Toronto Horticultural Association and was one of the foremost workers in connection with the inaugurating of the fruit, flower and honey show held in Toronto last fall.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

FIRST shipments of French Romans are at hand.

HENRY CRATZ, of Cratz Bros., clover seed dealers, at Toledo, O., died July 25, aged 57 years.

BEANS are still doing what is expected of them. No unfavorable reports have been received for some time.

RECENT arrivals from Europe are L. W. Bowen and D. M. Ferry, Jr., Detroit, who reached New York July 26.

THE Texas Seed & Floral Co., Dallas, Tex., will erect a seed warehouse 50x150 and four stories high, with track facilities.

EXTRA Early and Alaska peas are harvested for the most part and the growers estimate that they will thresh out a fair average crop.

FRANK RUE has bought the seed department of the J. C. Murray business at Peoria, Ill., with which he has been connected for some time.

AN English judge sustained the seedsman's non-warranty clause although a nondescript kale grew where the seed was bought as Best of All purple top swede.

THE Haven Seed Co., which in 1903 removed from South Haven, Mich., to Arroyo Grande, Cal., has now removed to Lodi, in San Joaquin county. The members of the firm are E. M. and A. B. Haven.

WITH the government still at it, and all the large mail order houses going after it, how much of an increase will the mail order seed houses be able to show in the year of the next census over the year of the last census?

IN a recent inquiry for a low price on onion sets the prospective buyer stipulated that anything larger than a golf ball need not be quoted. This gives the grower fully a better leeway than the inch and an eighth screen that is sometimes mentioned in quoting an off grade.

THE shakeup in the U. S. Department of Agriculture has resulted in the resignation of Prof. George T. Moore, who perfected the method of preparing nitroculture and in whose name the government took a patent on the process. It was found that Prof. Moore was financially interested in the Nitro-Culture Co., Westchester, Pa.

THE onion set crop for this year, as indicated in a recent issue of this paper, will be fully one-third less than the crop of 1904. The unevenness of the crop at all the growing points has cut the yield of good, merchantable sets far below the expectations of the least optimistic of the growers. The harvest is about two-thirds finished and the remaining one-third will add its full proportion to the shortage.

PEAS AND BEANS.

W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, Mich., writes as follows, under date of July 29:

"The heavy rains at planting time shortened the crops of peas and beans in this section and then the continuous rains from July 1 to 15 completely destroyed the early varieties of peas. Farther north the damage is not so great and crops will be fair. The effect of the rain has been equally bad in central Wisconsin.

"Beans were put in very late on account of wet weather and may be materially shortened by frost. Some fields are turning yellow at this time and will amount to nothing. However, if frost holds off a reasonable length of time the bean crop should be a fair one.

"Hay, oats and wheat had a very fine growth, but are very badly damaged and a large percentage entirely lost."

SEED GROWING IN CALIFORNIA.

[A paper by Lester L. Morse, Santa Clara, Cal., read before the American Seed Trade Association at its meeting at Alexandria Bay, N. Y.]

There is probably no one in the seed trade in America who is not more or less familiar with some California seed. It would be impossible now for a dealer to make up his stock without a large part of the important items coming from California and those who have spent many years in the seed business must be impressed with the constantly increasing list of kinds and varieties that the seed growers here are now growing.

Many of the seed dealers have visited the Pacific Coast and have some knowledge of conditions here, or as much knowledge as can be gained from a flying trip. But the phenomenal growth of the seed business as a business has brought a large number of new men into the field who have not yet visited California and it is to these men that I trust my paper will prove of special interest.

When we speak of California, we comprehend a large territory, with a great variety of climates, and soils, and conditions, for California is a state 770 miles long and 375 miles wide, with two long mountain ranges, two great plains, a number of great mountain peaks, several great rivers, and a number of very fertile and highly cultivated valleys. There are coast counties, mountain counties and counties in the interior, fifty-seven in all, some of them as large as eastern states. Japan, with its forty millions of people, covers only ninety-five per cent of the area of California with its one and a half millions of people, and there is a great deal more fertile soil here than in Japan.

The seed farms are all situated in what we call the coast counties, and south of San Francisco. The principal section is Santa Clara county, extending from thirty to eighty miles south of San Francisco. The adjacent county of Alameda, a few miles nearer and on the eastern side of San Francisco Bay, also contains several seed farms, quite an area being devoted to garden peas. From Santa Clara south there are no general seed farms for 270 miles, or in San Luis Obispo county, although at Watsonville, in the Pajaro valley, 100 miles south, there are large areas devoted to beans and sugar beets. Then in Lompoc valley, 300 miles south, is a very fertile district devoted to large areas of beans and commercial mustard.

Then farther south, 400 miles from San Francisco, is Santa Barbara and San Buena Ventura counties, where nearly the world's supply of lima beans is grown, but little else in the seedsmen's line. Still farther south, near Los Angeles and 500 miles south of San Francisco, there is some general seed growing and some lima bean growing.

Then north of San Francisco, about 200 miles up the coast, is Humboldt county, where fine garden peas have been grown for many years. This section is reached by ocean steamer or by a long stage ride and is difficult to visit. The experimental grounds of Luther Burbank are near Santa Rosa, about seventy-five miles north of San Francisco, in the Santa Rosa valley. The pea growing at Humboldt and Mr. Burbank's grounds are practically the only seed growing sections north of San Francisco.

There are large areas devoted to watermelon growing in San Joaquin county near Stockton, west of San Francisco about a hundred miles. Here melons are grown on a very extensive scale and shipped to all parts of the coast. While some seed is saved by some of the market growers, there is no regular vine-seed grower in the district, nor elsewhere in California. There is an immense area of fine soil in this section and also great tracts of very fertile soil for many miles about Stockton and Sacramento, but the climate is usually very warm in summer and represents what we term the interior districts. Most seed crops do better where the sea breezes keep the climate cool and moderate throughout the summer.

There are very large areas of reclaimed tule lands in and about the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, about midway between San Francisco and Sacramento and Stockton. These islands are peat lands and are extremely fertile, but are only protected by very high levees, and are always subject to overflow. An unusual inundation of a number of the largest islands in the spring of 1904 destroyed some seed crops and since that time practically all the seed growers have left these islands completely. A few years ago no less than 1,500 acres on Grand Island, Andrus Island, Tyler Island and other points were devoted to seed crops, such as onion, radish, carrot, etc.

While for nearly thirty years, California has been a factor in seed growing, the staple articles have usually been represented by onion and lettuce in the vegetable line, and in flower seeds by sweet peas. The list, however, has expanded very widely and, excepting sweet corn and melons, practically everything in the seed list is grown in California. Not that we produce any considerable supply of such items as cabbage, cauliflower, turnip or vine seeds, but they can be and will be grown here more or less in the future.

Most of the seed growing is on low, wet lands, well drained, and while some irrigating is done, the crops are generally dependent on rainfall. The planting begins early, usually in November and continues until about March 1. Onion bulbs are usually all set out and covered before January 1 and the seed for the next crop of bulbs is sown in January. While the mornings are cold at times during the winter, the thermometer rarely registers below 28 degrees, and planting is done throughout the winter, much as it is done in spring in colder countries.

The soil selected for seed is of several characters, the larger part of it being heavy, black adobe. Light sandy loam and stiff loams are also used for certain crops, but no gravelly or rocky lands or clay soils. Very few of the present seed farms have occupied their present situations for more than ten years and most of them for a less period. No fertilizer is used, or has been since it has proven cheaper to move to new locations than to continue a long time on one place and restore the exhausted soils with the aid of fertilizers. The long, dry summers and large proportions of sunshine help, in a large measure, to keep the soil in full strength. The long summers, usually free from rain after the middle of May until November 1, afford perfect ripening and harvesting conditions.

The curing, threshing and preliminary cleaning of seed crops is all done outdoors, on the land where the crops have grown. The only buildings required on a seed farm for the seed are rough cleaning houses and storage rooms. This is in marked contrast to the seed farms in Germany, where practically all of the crops are cured under cover, requiring very large and costly buildings for this purpose. The samples of California-grown seeds are usually bright and well-filled and of high vitality, all largely due to the cool but dry weather during harvest time. The opportunities for keeping all varieties free from mixture are superior also, since a crop need not be moved from the place where it has been grown until it is threshed and chaffed and put in bags with its proper tag and label.

The crops are usually cut in the mornings on account of the dew, which is most always heavy. As soon as cut, such seeds as shell easily are carried to white cotton drying sheets and spread out and left from two to three days to as many weeks, or until perfectly dry and thoroughly cured. The harvest season extends over a period of about six months, beginning with salsify and spinach in May and closing with leek, cucumber and tomato about November 1.

Perhaps an estimate of the areas devoted to the several crops will be interesting, but as I have compiled them rather rudely, I trust they will not be accepted as definite. They are at least approximately correct and represent the state of California only. I will mention the kinds only that include twenty-five acres or over; beet, fifty acres; carrot, 200 acres; celery and celeriae, fifty acres; cucumber, 250 acres; endive, twenty-five acres; leek, twenty-five acres; lettuce, 300 acres; curled mustard, twenty-five acres; onion, 2,000 acres; parsley, twenty-five acres; parsnip, twenty-five acres; radish, 500 acres; salsify, twenty-five acres; spinach, 100 acres; tomato, 125 acres; sweet peas, 750 acres; nasturtiums, fifty acres; other flower seeds, fifty acres; turnip, 100 acres; cabbage, twenty-five acres; garden peas, 1,000 acres; pole beans, 1,500 acres; bush beans, 750 acres; lima beans, 2,000 acres.

I have not included in these figures any commercial mustards, or market eating beans, but only what is wholly grown for the seed trade. My total figures make just about 10,000 acres. Included in this estimate is the item of miscellaneous flower seeds, a feature that promises greater proportionate expansion than any other line. A better knowledge of methods and selection and general type development is all that is necessary to give California flower seeds an equal reputation with those of any other country, with the very great advantage of a strong vitality and a fine sample of seed. The flower seed list includes asters, centaureas, marigolds, poppies, mignonette, eschscholtzias and smaller breadths of a score of other flowers.

I am not sure that I have enumerated enough in detail the varied crops of a California seed farm but I trust I have said enough to convince the convention that a visit to California in May and June would be an attractive excursion. The sweet peas are in bloom, the lettuce fields are great, varied-colored lawns, the onions are oceans of silver green, radish a forest of white, fragrant bouquets, and all nature is glorious in California in May. Then is the best time to come. The glory holds till well into June and June is a good time to come. The harvest begins to prediet itself in July and the seedsman brings his note book and figures possibilities in July and therefore July is a good time to come.

One can begin at Seattle and travel south to Los Angeles and go home from there, or reverse the order. Stops can be made all along the way and all the seed farms can be visited without retracing any part of the trip.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

We are in the midst of the idle season and many of the retailers are taking their vacations; those who remain are trying to make themselves as comfortable as possible, but I believe the worst is over. There is more stock of all kinds coming in and, while carnations are about down and out, asters are here in quantity and quality. Gladioli and lilies are abundant and roses are gradually improving. Beauties are small but fine for July. Up to date most of the stores are holding their own with other years, while the wholesalers are ahead of other seasons up to this time.

Various Notes.

The committee on transportation to the S. A. F. convention has arranged a very interesting and inexpensive itinerary and would like to make up a good-size party. They invite any friends interested outside of the club to join the party. At present those who have arranged to attend are Fred Burki, E. C. Reineman and family, Jos. Thomas, of Greensburg; J. W. Ludwig and wife, E. C. Ludwig and family, Gustav Ludwig and family, H. L. Blind and Howard Carney.

F. H. Westhoff, of Allison park, is adding two new carnation houses which are about completed.

Miss Lilly Geib, stenographer of the Cut Flower Co., is again at her post after a two weeks' vacation in the wilds of Blairsville, Pa. T. P. Langhans, secretary of the same firm, has taken his family to Chautauqua, but expects to spend a few days fishing in Canada.

Howard Carney, of J. B. Murdoch & Co., is a member of the crack volunteer hose company of the United States. They broke the time record in their last competition.

John Bader and H. L. Blind have returned from New York and Philadelphia, where they spent part of last week.

L. I. Neff is making many improvements at his Cheswick place, and stock there is looking very fine. They have just commenced planting carnations.

The S. A. F. Convention is close at hand and everyone is interested in knowing all about in the Trades' Display. Tell them about it in the next issue of

Kentias
As good as can be grown.
JOSEPH HEACOCK, Wyncote, Pa.

J. Elicker, of Homestead, is adding a couple of houses to his plant to take care of the increased demand for bedding stock in that neighborhood.

G. H. Pieser, secretary of Kennicott Bros. Co., Chicago, was one of the visitors last week.

John Orth, of McKeesport, stopped in the city long enough to say his houses were about finished and planting nearly done. Hoo-Hoo.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The July meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held at the Glen Cove Greenhouses. The attendance of members was large; in fact, the largest in the history of this young society. President Harrison occupied the chair. One new member was elected and one proposed. The exhibition table was decorated with a vase of Centaurea imperialis, a charming hardy annual; a collection of Japanese iris, large and in various colors; Elæagnus longipes in fruit; a dish of potatoes, Firstling, a very early potato of good size and shape, and clusters of Stirling Castle tomato, without doubt a grand table tomato, of perfect shape and color and a free setter.

The chief business of the evening was the launching of a schedule for a flower show to be held in Glen Cove in the beginning of November. J. F. J.

WASHINGTON.

Convention Preparations.

The regular weekly meeting of the Washington Florists' Club was held Monday, July 20, for the purpose of receiving reports from the outstanding committees and the transaction of other business in connection with the coming convention. The meeting was well attended and highly satisfactory in all respects.

Chairman W. F. Gude, of the reception committee, recommended that the president's reception be held in the open air, an entertainment similar to the regular lawn fete. He proposes having a brass band of about fifty pieces to furnish music while the usual refreshments are being served throughout the evening.

Though this is an innovation from the usual evening dress affair, customary heretofore, it was received with great favor by those present. It has been arranged to have the lawn lighted on this occasion by the full moon, assisted by several hundred incandescent lights, which no doubt will furnish a scene as beautiful to the eye as the other features will be comforting to the body. Special cars will be provided to carry every one from the convention hall out to the scene of action.

Music, refreshments and good cheer will be in such abundance that we trust those present will call themselves fortunate in being able to recall the auspicious opening of what the Washington florists hope to make one of the most successful meetings in the history of the S. A. F. B.

Band Concerts.

Uncle Sam's contribution to the entertainment of visitors during convention week in Washington will be many and varied but among them a series of concerts by some of the military bands stationed around Washington will be most enjoyable. The following schedule is announced for convention week:

Monday, Aug. 14, U. S. Cavalry band in the Smithsonian grounds, 7:30 to 9 p. m.
Tuesday, Aug. 15, U. S. Engineer band in Washington Circle, 7:30 to 9 p. m.
Thursday, Aug. 17, U. S. Cavalry band in Judiciary park, 7:30 to 9 p. m.
Friday, Aug. 18, U. S. Engineer band in Iowa Circle, 7:30 to 9 p. m.

It is also expected that the world-famous Marine band will give its regular concerts on Wednesday evening at the Capitol grounds, and on Saturday at the White House grounds.

These places are all accessible by street cars. J. H. Freeman.

WASHINGTON HOTELS.

The following list of hotels and rates is supplied by the hotel committee of the Washington Florists' Club:

PACIFIC COAST.

U. S. TESTING GARDEN.

In some special cases, notably in California, close co-operation has been effected between the U. S. Department of Agriculture and the state experiment stations, having for its object the establishment of important testing gardens and other allied work. With the assistance of the officers of the California experiment station a testing garden has been established at Chico. The land for this garden has been donated to the experiment station, to be held in trust by the station for the use of the Bureau of Plant Industry. It is planned to carry on extensive work here in the matter of testing grains, fruits and other crops especially adapted to the Pacific Coast.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather continues favorable for handling flowers, but business has gone. Up to a week ago there was something doing in a social way, but now even that has entirely stopped and funeral work has disappeared completely. Carnations had a severe roasting from the hot spell a couple of weeks ago and as a result they are not yet up to color or size, although the quality seems to be improving in the dark weather we are now having. Roses are also small and weak from the same cause, but are improving daily. Asters are not yet very plentiful; it will be more than a week before we have them in quantities. Outdoor stock of all kinds is plentiful except long-stemmed peas, which are very scarce. Gladioli are being sold by the growers at from $1.50 to $2.50 per hundred. Lilies and valley are almost out of the market and tuberoses are being sold in considerable quantities. Maidenhair is extra good now, but asparagus is scarcer. All kinds of green stuff and wild flowers are getting shorter in supply. Owing to the continued cold weather we may expect people back to town early next month, when business should commence again.

Various Notes.

D. H. Lenox, of Los Angeles, is here on a visit. Mr. Lenox recently disposed of his retail business and will take a few months' rest before opening a new establishment.

Frank Armanino is cutting quantities of Kaiserin roses at present. He recently leased the greenhouses of the late Charles Hasselbacher, near Berkeley.

The Cox Seed Co. has erected a new office building at the entrance to its grounds at Glen Echo.

John Vallance is back in town. He spent several weeks on his ranch at Livermore.

Charles Holtze, of Seattle, is in San Francisco renewing old acquaintances and incidentally looking up stock for the coming season. He reports a very fair spring trado and prospects good for another active season.

John Cooke, the pioneer florist, is dangerously ill at his residence in Berkeley.

J. H. Gilmore has taken charge of the greenhouses of Domoto Bros., at Elmhurst.

The joint committees appointed by the California State Floral Society and the Pacific Coast Horticultural Society have arranged for the coming exhibition to be held in the nave of the Ferry building, November 9 to 11.

S. Clack is on his annual trip to Oregon and Washington.

A visit to the grounds of Thorsted & Co., at Fruitvale, shows the outdoor carnations in splendid shape and ready to be transplanted under glass. This firm is at present erecting another house 27x 200 feet, making seven houses in all.

THF JAPANESE QUESTION.

The Japanese as a Gardener.

The Japanese are naturally fond of flowers and make fair gardeners, even in this country, where we do not trend toward the dwarfing of vegetation or the manufacturing of grotesque designs. They are not suitable for heavy work, but for the ordinary care of greenhouses and the growing and care of plants they have good success, and, although not rapid workers, accomplish a fair day's work. They are patient and sober but not as reliable as Chinese as a whole. They have made great strides in the line of gardening in private places and have displaced many hundreds of white gardeners in this section. They usually work at from 50 cents to $1 per day less.

The Japanese as a Wholesaler.

One of the largest establishments in California is owned and managed by Japanese, not one of whom can more than barely make himself understood in English. About fifty men are employed and the products are sent daily to San Francisco. A large portion of the plant is devoted to the growing of ferns and palms, and, although the quality of the stock is not up to that produced by other growers, it is sold cheaper and is eagerly bought by the smaller stores on that account. Carnations and roses are also grown in large quantities and have the same fault; the quality is never first-class. I think this condition will be found with all the Japanese growers. They certainly as yet are no competition with the rest of the growers when quality is considered. There are about 500 men employed in the various wholesale places in the vicinity of San Francisco.

The Japanese as a Retailer.

Said one of the largest Japanese growers to me a few days ago: "If the white men do not buy our flowers we will start retail stores all over town and market our own products. We are bound to get the best of the florists' business." As yet the Japanese have not started many stores, probably half a dozen in Oakland and San Francisco, but those that are established are doing considerable business in a small way, and I do not see what is to prevent them from carrying out the project as outlined to me. They are keen business men, crafty and cunning, and they pursue the same

The grand prize winner in competition with the latest and very best products in Carnations, east or west, for the last eight years.

Mr. John A. Balmer, of Clealum, Washington, after his visit to our nurseries in January, 1902, wrote an article for a trade paper in which he said: "The Hannah Hobart is really a remarkable flower, never less than four inches, and frequently four and one-half inches across. In color it is a shade deeper than Lawson, but the petal arrangement is quite different, in this respect it most resembles the old Jubilee, but of course the color is different. I saw two large houses of it at Sievers', and the sight is one long to be remembered, hundreds of blooms and not a poor one in the lot, and everyone the exact counterpart of the other, no burst calyxes, but every flower supported on a 24-inch stem, and standing up like soldiers. There is certainly no carnation of its color that can equal it."

The above is a truthful statement of facts by a very competent gentleman, and if needing verification, the simple assertion that the flowers of this magnificient variety of Carnation have been sold wholesale as high as $1.50 per dozen, and none less than $1 per dozen up to date, should be enough to convince anybody of its intrinsic value. (See illustration of an average bloom in the Florists' Review, June 1, 1905.)

The constant inquiry by everyone who has seen the plants in flower is: "When will the Hannah Hobart be for sale?" This led us at last to the conclusion to distribute the same next year, and we are ready to book orders from now on for delivery beginning Jan. 1, 1906.

Send your orders in early because they will be filled strictly in rotation. Price, $3.00 per 12; $15.00 per 100; $120.00 per 1000.

taetics in a retail store that they do in their wholesale establishments; that is, to undersell the white man. A great portion of the publie seem to be constantly hunting for something cheap and naturally they will patronize the Japanese retail stores when more of them are started.

What is to be Done?

The white growers are beginning to feel in a most uncomfortable way the competition of the Japanese, for whom they are no match when it is a proposition involving a fair price paid to labor and the cheap produetion of cut flowers. Certainly the Japanese raise, as a rule, only second quality stock, but they are growing that in such vast quantities that they have corralled a large portion of the trade from the smaller stores and the street hucksters. The wholesale dealers have had several meetings to consider the question and various plans have been proposed to regulate it, but as yet nothing definite has been attempted.

In eonclusion, I might say that this we know positively, that the Japanese have eompletely ruined several branches of trade on this coast, and many of us are beginning to wonder if the florists' trade will be the next. G.

He now has 10,000 feet of modern glass which he handles profitably without any experienced assistant. PEONIES IN THE SOUTH.

Please tell your southern readers if it is practicable to grow peonies in the south. Please tell us something about planting, soil treatment and varieties. H. J. V.

We have found from past experience that peonies, to succeed well, should be planted in the south as early after the middle of October as practicable. Plants set out later than February seldom give as good results as those which are planted earlier.

The best soil is one that is deep and loamy. It is best to prepare the soil of the bed by trenching, and mix in a liberal supply of decomposed cow manure.

Some varieties give larger and more flowers when planted on the northwest side of a building, where they have partial shade, although many varieties give excellent results in open sun. The main thing is to keep the plants abundantly supplied with water during the blooming period.

After a killing frost the bed should be top dressed with decomposed stable manure and, in planting, set the crowns from three to four inches below the surface and remove all roots that might be injured. All that is required for after-cultivation is to keep the beds free from weeds and give them a fall dressing of manure.

The varieties that have given the best results with us are as follows: Queen Emma, Pulcherrima, Agida, Argus, Andre Lauries, Buckii, Duke of Wellington. Eclatante, Elegantissima, Festiva maxima, Marie Lemoine, Miranda, Psyche, Purpurea, Queen Victoria, Rubra triumphans, Victor Moorish and the varieties of the officinalis class for early blooming.

P. J. BERCKMANS.

ROOT-PRUNING DEVICE.

By a careful consideration of the best nursery practice to be followed out in the government nursery at Halsey, Neb., where there is a total seed bed area of two and one-half acres, with a capacity of two and one-half to three million seedlings annually, it is found that seedlings should be two years old before planting to their permanent sites in the sand-hills. Transplanting increases the cost of seedlings so materially that it is not considered practical to transplant the vast quantity of seedlings grown in the Halsey nursery, and hence it is considered advisable to root-prune all yearling stock and allow same to remain in the seed bed for another year, at the end of which time the seedlings will have produced a vigorous root system equal, or nearly equal, to transplanted stock.

Until this spring, root-pruning has not been satisfactory, owing to the fact that no suitable device has been hit upon to do rapid, and at the same time, satisfactory work. Spades have been used, but with such a tool the lateral roots only can be cut, while the essential root to be pruned is the long tap-root which is formed by most all the coniferous species.

In the San Gabriel nurseries, near Pasadena, Cal., a tool has been devised for pruning, which consists of a combined perpendicular and horizontal blade, to which a handle is attached, and this is pulled through the soil by one hand. This tool works very satisfactory in a small nursery like the one near Pasadena, but it is entirely inadequate in a nursery like the one at Halsey, where millions of seedlings are to be pruned annually.

The important feature of a tool devised to meet the need is the cutting blade. This is one inch wide and one-eighth of an inch thick, and made from a first-class piece of steel. It is U shaped and the perpendicular sides are seven inches long, and the horizontal base is six inches long. This blade is riveted to substantial collars, which are made to fit on a Planet, Jr., garden hoe frame. This is a single wheel frame and attached to a double wheeled frame it would make a more substantial tool. The cutting blade is filed to a keen edge, and kept so during the pruning operation. By having such a thin blade, and keeping it sharp, there is practically no resistance offered in passing through the soil, and all roots are cut without the usual injury done with a heavier tool.

By the use of this tool two men can prune from 100,000 to 150,000 in eight hours. This is extremely satisfactory speed when it is compared with other processes.

Immediately after pruning the beds are carefully raked over in order to level up the soil in the beds, which is more or less disturbed at the surface. This operation does not require a great deal of time, and is considered highly beneficial to the young seedlings.

MAPLE TREE SCALE.

J. H. Frost, who is ridding the trees at Graceland of the cottony maple scale, says that the most effieient remedy is spraying with a ten per cent solution of kerosene emulsion applied, if in summer, just after the eggs have hatched. At this time the insect is in its weakest state of existence. It is better, however, to spray in the late fall when it is easier to reach all parts of the tree. A fifty per cent solution may then be used.

The Market.

The demand kept up well for all kinds of good flowers, up to July 22. Some days much more stock could have been sold, but since then there has been practically nothing doing. The last week in July was the dullest of the season.

It was thought that there would be a scarcity of good roses, owing to the heavy rains, but judging from the number shipped to the wholesalers there is not much danger of any shortage, many being carried over from day to day. White Cochet roses are scarce, considering the number of plants to cut from. There are still some white carnations of fair quality being shipped to this market. Outdoor stock is beginning to arrive, but very short in stem. Both kinds of asparagus can be had in quantity.

Various Notes.

G. V. Smith has sold his corner property, Baltimore and Loyd streets, where he has been located for a number of years, but will carry on the business next door.

Small, neat signs appear in all leading florists' store windows, "We close during July and August at 5 p. m., Saturdays at 1 p. m."

J. P. G. Schunke, of East North avenue, near the Baltimore cemetery, is offering his greenhouses for sale, being in ill health for years.

Mrs. Charles Held and daughter Lena are at Atlantic City for two weeks. Miss Mathilda Held has just returned from there after a ten days' trip.

Miss Anna Fielder, of A. G. Fielder & Co., has returned from a two weeks' vacation at Ocean City, Md.

Much of the time at the last club meeting was spent in making final preparations for the entertainment of the visiting members of the S. A. F. after the Washington convention, when the club hopes to have a large number of visitors. The committee promises to take care of all and an enjoyable time is assured. A. F.

Belmont, N. Y.—C. L. Walker is building three connected houses for general purposes.

Red Wing, Minn.—George Humphrey now has Miss Hilma Hage in his store, where business is increasing nicely.

OMAHA.

Trade is at its lowest at present and but for occasional funeral work nothing would be doing.

The past season has been very successful and, coupled with a good growing season this summer, the prospects are very bright. Carnation planting is going on and the plants lifted are fine, the weather being right for planting.

The annual picnic of the Florists' Club was held at Courtland Beach July 27 and was pronounced a decided success. The attendance was larger than ever.

Interest with the men centered on the bowling contest. Teams chosen by Messrs. Arnold and Bath engaged each other and no more spirited contest was ever held. Three individual prizes were offered and won by Arnold, Floth and J. F. Wilcox. The score:

At the recent annual election of officers of the Miami Floral Co., the following board was chosen: President, C. E. Pease; vice-president and manager, William Kiefaber; secretary, E. A. Deem; treasurer, William Kiefaber, Jr.; directors with the above, John T. Barlow and Charles Whealan.

In a little over three years the Miami Floral Co. has increased the plant from 10,000 to 100,000 square feet of glass and plans are now under way to double that capacity the coming year. Florists from all over the United States and Canada have visited the place and have pronounced it to be equal to anything they had ever inspected. The specialties are roses and carnations for the shipping trade. Their plant is located at foot of Broadway and River streets and covers thirty-two and one-half acres of ground and is under the management of George W. Bartholomew, formerly connected with the largest greenhouses in Chicago.

SEED SAVING.

Much might be written on this subject. I cannot believe that localities have any particular influence, but more depends upon the system of saving and ripening seeds, says a contributor to the Horticultural Advertiser. As an instance I may mention mignonette seed. When I grew it in large quantities, I found it best to keep each saving of seed separate, for when several different lots were put together the seed did not germinate so evenly; and once, when wanting some to sow, I had to use some which had not long been collected, with the result that it was very slow to germinate, and came up unevenly. This is contrary to the general rule, as immature seeds usually germinate quicker than those thoroughly ripened. As an example of this I may refer to cannas. When thoroughly ripened it takes a long time for the hard shell to split, and it is recommended to file them to assist the bursting; but if seeds are sown before they are quite ripened off, they will germinate in a short time, and require no assistance to burst their shells. In these there does not appear to be any loss in vigor from sowing immature seeds.

I am not prepared to state from actual observation, but it is supposed that with tomatoes unripe seed will germinate quickly, and plants will be weak; but if they can be got over the early stages of growth, they will crop earlier, and the crop may be heavier, though not such large fruits individually. I can say that I have had remarkably good results from seeds five and six years old. I have also grown cockscombs from seed seven years old, and the plants appear to form the combs earlier than those from new seed. It used to be a theory that stocks would produce a larger percentage of doubles from old seed. I have proved that it may be kept for several years, but cannot vouch for the fact that it it likely to produce more doubles. There is one thing, however, that I fully believe; that is, that a much larger percentage of double flowers is obtained from seed saved from the main stems only, and these topped when they have attained to a fair length.

I remember when balsams were grown for exhibition, a most successful exhibitor always saved his seed from the main stems only, and he attributed his success to the fact of having carefully selected the seed, but I think culture also had something to do with his success.

There are many seeds which under natural conditions are subject to a long period of drying, and which no amount of drying seems to injure; but there are others which never do get thoroughly dried. Taking cyclamen seed as an example, this should never be subject to much drying; from the time it is collected until it is sown it should be kept in a cool place. Shut up in a tin box, it will keep firm and plump, but when over-dried it does not germinate so readily, and the seedlings are weaker. All primula seed is easily perished by over-drying. I remember losing seed of some choice varieties of P. Sinensis through accidentally having it on a shelf, exposed to the sun a few days too long. The seed of this has often given trouble, and I believe the cause may be traced to over-drying. I might here add, that when sowing any of the cyclamen, primula, etc., a covering of finely chopped sphagnum moss, which will retain moisture will be much better than any other covering; and when this is used, if the pots are stood in a shady position where they are otherwise exposed to the light, the seeds will germinate, and not be so liable to damp off as when the pots are covered with glass, or closely shaded.

It is now about the time for the seed of Aralia Sieboldi to arrive, and this is an example of perishable seed. It will lose its vitality in a few days if allowed to get dry. I have kept it several months, shut up in a tin box, and kept in a cool place; but sown as soon as received, it will germinate more satisfactorily, and the young plants will come stronger.

Some seeds may be all the better for being kept a considerable time; yet others, which under natural conditions germinate as soon as they fall from the plants, perish quickly, and vitality may be destroyed by over drying. Seeds may be perfectly good when received from a seedsman, but their vitality may soon be destroyed by keeping them in a dry, warm place. We hear of fern spores keeping good for an indefinite period, and some may if under suitable conditions, yet under ordinary treatment I have proved that many will perish within a year.

SOAPS AS INSECTICIDES.

Any good soap is effective in destroying soft-bodied insects, such as plant-lice and young or soft-bodied larvæ. As winter washes in very strong solution, they furnish one of the safest and most effective means against scale insects. The soaps made of fish oil and sold under the name of whale-oil soaps are often especially valuable, but variable in composition and merits. A soap made with caustic potash rather than with caustic soda, as is commonly the case, and not containing more than thirty per cent of water should be demanded, the potash soap yielding a liquid in dilution more readily sprayed and more effective against insects. The soda soap washes are apt to be gelatinous when cold, and difficult or impossible to spray except when kept at a very high temperature.

For plant-lice and delicate larvæ a strength obtained by dissolving half a pound of soap in a gallon of water is sufficient. For the pea louse as little as one pound of potash fish-oil soap to six gallons has been effective (Smith). Soft soap will answer as well as hard, but at least double quantity should be taken.—Bulletin.

CARNATIONS IN ENGLAND.

The American long-stemmed carnations have quite taken the lead in all floral decorations in England in which carnations are employed. We have raised many fine carnations in this country, mainly for exhibition and border purposes; though there are some winter and spring flowering varieties, grown under glass, of which Uriah Pike may be cited as an example, which produces its flowers on long stems, but the American raisers have made this a peculiarly distinct requirement in their schedule of properties, and they have succeeded in a remarkable degree. The admirable manner in which they have been staged by Messrs. Dutton, Felton and others, in masses in large trumpet vases, has powerfully appealed to the imaginations of many, and given an enormous impulse to the demand for plants.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

The Market.

Very little has been done in the retail stores this week. Some fine rains have visited us, making things look considerably fresher than for some weeks. Roses, with some few exceptions, are very poor. Carnations are fair, considering the heat. Sweet peas are almost out of the market and are of poor quality. Asters are coming in and are fair. There is a large stock of gladioli, Shasta daisies and dahlias coming in and they are selling rapidly, bringing fair prices. Stock at the growers' is looking well and we hope for some good stock soon. A few weddings and garden parties are using up the outdoor flowers, but very little is being realized for them.

Various Notes.

The Alpha Floral Co. is doing quite a business, considering the dull season, and keep quite a stock on hand.

Miss Louise Boggess, with D. Freudenthal, has returned from a two weeks' vacation in the country.

A peep into the greenhouses of Sam Murray shows things to be in first-class condition and when the time rolls around for the flower show Mr. Murray will be an important factor.

Another one who will make himself felt is W. J. Barnes, who is putting his houses in fine condition and has some very fine stock on his benches.

Some new stock of roses is coming in from A. Broman's place in Independence and, considering everything, is about the best seen here. Mr. Broman's stock is handled exclusively by Miss M. Dalley, who finds a ready market for the output.

Mr. Harnden, of the Harnden Seed Co., is making arrangements to put in a refrigerator at his place near the market and expects to handle cut flowers, commencing the first of September. Mr. Harnden will have no competition in his end of town and should do a good business.

The Owl Florists held their opening last Saturday and, although the day was a miserably wet one, their sales were very fair. Considering that their store is small, they have one of the neatest establishments in the city.

Nelson Jarrett was at the market Saturday with a fine load of begonias and ferns. He is one of the best begonia growers in this section of the country and always finds a ready sale for his product.

Jacob Tobler, who has been under the weather the past two weeks, was in the market Saturday with some fine stock.

Henry Lambach, with L. Baumann, Chicago, was here last week.

ST. PAUL.

July 23 the annual picnic was held by the Twin City florists at Wildwood, White Bass Lake, both Minneapolis and St. Paul sending a large contingent of florists, their families and their most intimate friends. The day was an ideal picnic day and everybody was feeling high over it. All the races and contests came off without a hitch and the prizes were good and honors just about even. They were too many to mention names. The committee, composed of Mr. Hartman, of Minneapolis, N. C. Hansen and William Swanson, of St. Paul, did everything they could to satisfy everybody. The ride on the steamer Ramsley, with the inevitable ice cream and cake for the ladies, and cigars for the gentlemen was the principal affair of the day. Henry Puvogel sang solos, also several ladies showed musical culture and excitement ran high, especially on the latest songs. After this dancing was all the go with the younger element and it was late, very late, when the last florist crawled under.

Some of our growers are getting things ready for benching carnations as soon as possible, but quite a few of them are averse to it, and claim the old way of planting in the first half in September is better. Otherwise everything is pretty quiet all around, as usual, and everyone is waiting for W. Strehlow's wedding, which is to take place as soon as his new residence is completed. Hurrah! Three cheers for "Billy"! C. B.

Will you please cut out my advertisement of cannas? You are too much for me; I can't keep up with the orders if I keep you going.—James Frost, Greenville, O.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held July 25. Three new members were elected and three names proposed.

There was a good attendance and a good show of cut flowers. The monthly prize given by Secretary Newbrand for the best display of flowers cut outdoors brought out a good competition. The winning collection came from Greystone, Samuel Untermyer's place at Yonkers, and contained over 100 species and varieties. The gardener, John Featherstone, was highly complimented.

An interesting discussion developed on the culture and diseases of the hollyhock. Regarding the time of sowing the consensus of opinion was that the first week in August is best. From seed sown then plants can be had strong enough to winter over without loosing the center growth, as is the case with earlier plants. Regarding the hollyhock disease, several of the members gave their experience with different treatments, but so far no reliable preventive seems to have been found. It was conceded that atmospheric conditions and situation had a good deal to do with it, a close, humid atmosphere and heavy night dews assisting the progress of the disease. A high open situation is the best place to plant, freedom of air being one of the best agencies to keep the disease in check.

The committee on the annual outing reported that it had made arrangements to have the dinner at Beck's Rye Beach hotel on August 16 at two o'clock and that a program had been arranged for on the hotel grounds, the sports to begin at noon. W. S.

Albany, N. Y.—John Dingwall, on the Troy road, swallowed Paris green by mistake on July 14. Instantly realizing what he had done, he hurried to St. Peter's Hospital, where a stomach pump saved his life and he is now none the worse for his experience.

Danville, Ill.—Wm. Linfoot has sold out to H. A. Dubuis, who will not only continue the business under the name of the Danville Plant & Flower Co., but will put it on a much larger scale. Mr. Dubuis is a son of O. F. Dubuis, superintendent of parks at Peoria, Ill., and who was for about twenty-five years superintendent of the west side parks in Chicago. The son has until recently been head-gardener under his father at Peoria.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Lysimachia Nummularia.

Window boxes of high and low degree are likely to be much in fashion next year. A window box is a small, cramped-up style of ornamental gardening compared to our veranda boxes, the drooping plants in which hang down to meet the coleus or cannas or salvias planted in a narrow border at the base of the veranda. Perhaps there is some permanent climbing plant on the pillars, and then on the spacious veranda sit the bald-headed grandpa and two or three generations of his posterity. Such scenes make our resident streets beautiful and homelike.

In such places we think window boxes would be rather out of keeping. Not so in crowded cities, where no plot of grass or group of shrubs can exist between the sidewalk and the house. There, where nothing but brick and stone confront the eye, the window box is appreciated. Twenty years ago we noticed them much used in the country towns of England and two gay colors were much in evidence, the blue lobelia and Calceolaria aurea floribunda. Neither of these plants is of use to us. The lobelia makes a nice show the day it is put in the box, but is never as good afterwards and in July it goes out of commission entirely.

Now there are any number of upright plants suitable for these boxes, but free growing drooping plants are not so common and it has taken these preliminary remarks to tell you that one of the very best is the common little money vine, Lysimachia nummularia. This poor, creeping little plant is crushed with the name of a Grecian philosopher or Roman emperor a little worse than Nero. We never have too many nice plants of it in the month of May. In many places it has escaped from vases or boxes and has taken possession of the ground, forming a green matt in place of sod.

Cut off two or three inches of the tender tops and dibble three of them into a 2-inch pot. Place the tops anywhere outside or inside, but you may as well put them in a frame at once, where they are to stay until the end of next March. Protect during the winter with glass or boards or your pots will be cracked, but the little plants want to be frozen up hard, for that is just what they need. When they are thawed out in early spring, bring them into the greenhouse, pinch off the dead tops, if any, and shift into 3-inch pots and set along the edge of the benches and in a few weeks you will have fine plants and the runners covered with gay little yellow blossoms. I do not know of any better or prettier plant for the purpose, or one so cheaply supplied.

There is another weed excellent as a drooper, which wants just the same manipulation. It is Glechoma variegata. The green form of this will destroy any grass if it gets a good start, but the variegated form makes a fine drooper where so-called vines are wanted.

Poinsettias.

Do not let shade from any cause be over your young poinsettias. Keep them on the lightest bench and the pots plunged to keep them from continually drying out. This is a good time to put in a batch of cuttings for use for pans. Do not take them out of the sand and put directly into the 8, 10 or 12-inch pans. Better pot in 2½-inch and when once rooted select for each pan plants of uniform size and strength. You can always depend on a good demand for these well grown plants in pans and there is much more profit in them than there is in some flowering plants we import.

If your trade calls for cut stems of these poinsettias there is plenty of time yet to plant out young plants in five inches of good, heavy soil. It should be in a house where it never goes below 50 degrees. This may seem a little low for such a tropical plant, but when planted out the roots are sound and active and they do not need as much heat.

In a bed or bench plant out your old plants that you are taking cuttings from. You will still get cuttings and a lot of useful, moderate size bracts.

Verbenas.

There are still a few growers of verbenas who still propagate by cuttings, which, of course, is the only way if you grow named varieties. About the middle or the end of this month cut back a few of each of the varieties you want to perpetuate, stir up the ground around the plants and work in a little fine manure. In three or four weeks you will have plenty of young growths, just the stuff for cuttings, which will root much more readily than the old, wiry cuttings that the old growths would give you.

We look for a return to popularity for this sweet, old, flower-garden plant. Beds of verbenas of one color take us back many years. It seems they used to grow taller and stronger about the time of the Crimean war, for we remember verbenas occupied the center of the beds with an edging of some silver variegated geraniums. In those days whole beds were occupied with heliotropes, which were commonly called "cherrie pie," we suppose from the sweet odor, and we remember when a very small boy having seen a wild rabbit hide himself in a luxuriant bed of heliotrope. We screamed out much to the amusement of a dozen men with scythes: "Aleck, there is a rabbit in the cherry pie." The love of hunting or killing game is very early in evidence in boys. It is an honest and natural trait, for we are descended from prehistoric hunters who killed or starved. As friend Bell, of Franklin, Pa., beautifully says of old brute man: "From stronger beasts he fled, on weaker beasts he fed." But I am getting slightly away from my text.

John Westcott.

Cold Frames.

This is a time of the year when you can make good use of cold-frames. Young cinerarias, calceolarias, Primula Sinensis and P. obconica and even, if you have no better place, 3-inch pots of Begonia Lorraine, and more particularly some of the shrubby begonias, such as the improved B. incarnata; all these can be well managed in a cold-frame. The sash can be raised back and front so that there is a constant current of fresh air and there is the great advantage of being able to shade from the mid-day sun with lattice or cheese-cloth shading and clear light the rest of the daylight hours. William Scott.

JOHN WESTCOTT.

John Westcott, president of the Philadelphia Florists' Club, is one of the most popular men in our profession. He has been a successful business man for the past thirty years, first as a member of the firm of Pennock Bros., later as a member of the firm of John & W. H. Westcott. Mr. Westcott's genial disposition and unfailing interest in all his fellow florists have won for him hosts of friends, invitations to his fishing parties at Waretown being highly prized. Mr. Westcott has done excellent work for the Philadelphia Florists' Club and to his efforts are in a measure due the good size delegations that Philadelphia sends. even to distant convention cities. Mr. Westcott will head the Philadelphia delegation leaving Broad street station for Washington at 8:32 a. m. next Tuesday. His portrait is on page 603. Phil.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Freshly Planted Stock.

The first two weeks after your carnations are planted are perhaps the most trying of all to your patience and skill as a grower. During that time you can either make or ruin at least your early crop of blooms. If you are careful and faithful you will get your plants started in their new quarters with but a slight check, and they will go right on growing and your early blooms will be of good quality. On the other hand, if you are careless and neglect your plants even a single warm day they will suffer severely and even if you succeed in keeping them all alive you will be able to see the effects for a long time in dead foliage and poor blooms.

The greatest aids in helping to get the plants re-established are shade and water, but while they are aids they can also easily be made a detriment. Too much shade and too much water are as bad as too little, and to give just enough of each and no more is where your judgment and experience are called into play. During the first two days the shade can hardly be too heavy if the days are warm, but as soon as the roots take hold and begin to supply the plants with moisture the plants want light and as the roots become more and more active in the same degree the plants will want more light until they have the full sunlight to feed upon.

To keep the same heavy shade on the glass until the roots are thoroughly active is to unbalance the plants' growth. The plants in the absence of light cannot develop a healthy tissue and a weak, soft, spindly growth is the result, which wilts when exposed to the strong light. So we try to remove the shade by degrees as the plants show signs of recovering. After they have been planted about one week you should remove about one-third of the shade, either by washing it off or with a brush. We like to have it done by a rain, if possible, because usually after a rain we have a few cooler days, but don't wait too long for the rain. In another week remove another third, and as soon as the plants will stand it remove all the shade, which will usually be after about three weeks.

All this time the hose is playing a very important part in the operation. After the first watering, which is to settle the soil around the roots, the soil will need little or no water for a week or so, except what it gets when syringing. While the roots are becoming reestablished and are unable to supply the plants with any, or sufficient water, you must use the hose and by syringing the plants overhead sustain them in a fresh condition, ready to draw on the roots as soon as they are able to supply them. But it must not be overdone. All you want is to keep the plants fresh. Encourage them all you can to draw on the roots; it will cause activity in the roots.

Each time you remove some of the shade you will have to syringe oftener for a day or two, but discontinue it just as soon as the plants will stand up without it. For a few weeks keep the soil just fairly moist, but do not let it get dry and crusty on the surface. Stir it often and before it gets very dry water just enough to keep it damp. Give all the air you can at all times.

A. F. J. Baur.

PLANTS FROM THE FIELD.

In the Review of July 27 Mr. Baur writes that carnation plants from the field "should be kept covered closely to keep the sun and wind from them until planted." I have about 10,000 carnations to plant. The field they are in is a mile from the greenhouses. It takes three men two hours to dig up a load of plants and haul it to the greenhouses, using a one-horse wagon carrying about 750 plants at a load. Is it necessary to cover the plants when they are not out of the soil longer than two or three hours? If so, what should I cover them with? If they are not covered will they recover quickly or is the check severe enough to affect next year's crop? Would you advise dipping? G. F.

I certainly would advise you to cover your carnation plants while digging and hauling them if they are out of the soil as much as two hours. Just how much the plants would suffer would, of course, depend on the weather and the condition of the plants. For instance, if your plants have had frequent rains and are just a little soft in growth, and you happen to be digging them on a hot, bright day, two hours out in the hot sun and air would give them such a check that it would take them a long time to get over it and you would likely lose a good many altogether. If your plants are well matured, and I may say, hard, they would not suffer so much, but it would not do them any good and it would have its effect on the time it would take them to start to growing. You would lose more foliage, too, than where there was no wilting of the plants.

When you consider how little trouble it is to cover them you can readily see that if it helps the plants even the least bit in this trying ordeal it will pay to do it. Take some burlap and roughly stitch it together to make a piece large enough to cover your wagon and drop down over the sides, and throw it over the plants as you load in the boxes. This will keep off the sun and the wind. The one is as bad as the other. If you load in each box as soon as it is filled with plants, they need never be exposed longer than twenty minutes at the most. If you will keep the burlap wet it will be all the better, besides being heavier and blowing less with the wind.

Just how much such exposure as you describe would affect next season's crop would, of course, depend on how much the plants suffered. Many growers follow the mistaken idea that it does not do any damage to the crop to allow the plants to suffer occasionally, as long as the plants seem to recover in time. More careful growers will tell you that any check to the growth of a plant will have more or less effect on the crop later on, according to the time or severity of the suffering. A plant that is healthy at the start and is kept in a growing condition, will always produce better results than a plant that either starts out as a runt or meets with a severe check at some later time. This transplanting of the carnation plants is not natural to them, nor is it of any benefit to them whatever, though of course it must be done to get them under cover for winter blooming. The fact that they recover quickly and go on growing is no argument. Look at those you planted in the house in the spring. How much better they are early in the season and how much cleaner in the way of dead foliage, yes, and disease, too. Of course in time these transplanted ones catch up with them. If they were handled carefully, so that little or no wilting occurred, they will overtake them before Christmas, but in many cases the quality remains lower until the spring crop comes, or even later. Usually the greatest difference will be noticed in the earlier crops, up to January. By that time, if the treatment has been good, the plants will overcome the effects of any ordinary check.

As I said in the same number of the Review, we used to practice dipping the roots as they were dug, but this year we are not dipping them. Our plants are taking hold nicely, although I cannot say that the dispensing with dipping is causing it, because we have had no rain to speak of for four weeks and our plants are in fine shape to transplant. Anyway it does not seem to make them take hold less readily. If your plants are large and the least bit soft on account of abundant rains I would advise you to dip them when they must remain out of the ground several hours. It will prevent wilting and that is the first thing to look to. During this operation the first sign of the plant's suffering is in wilting.

The Capitol Building at the Capital City, Where the S. A. F. will Hold a Capital Meeting Next Week.

If you can keep your plants from wilting for ten days you need not worry about them taking hold after that. As to whether dipping pays for the trouble, I would merely say that nothing is too much trouble if it will help the plants through this trying time.

A. F. J. BAUR.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

The following interesting and apparently official communication appeared last week in the REVIEW'S contemporaries. As no copy reached the REVIEW its reproduction here is with credit to the Florists' Exchange:

To the Commercial Florists of North America, and to all others who are interested in Floriculture as any part of their life work:

The twenty-first annual convention of this society will be held in Washington, D. C., August 15 to 18, 1905. This society, for the past twenty years, has been a representative one. It has been the foremost national organization in horticulture. It has accomplished much on broad, general lines. It has helped needed and favorable legislation. It has everywhere reduced the cost of transporting plants. It has disseminated much knowledge of cultural methods. It has checked misrepresentations of unscrupulous dealers. It has inspired most of those exhibitions which have attracted public attention to ornamental horticulture.

Having been present at all of the meetings of this society, and having taken some part in them, I may claim a measure of loyalty to its work, though if further evidence be needed, the fact that its chief office lies in me this year is sufficient reason why I should speak plainly for its welfare.

Let us look at its membership record. Fifteen years ago, in 1889 and 1890, we averaged 1,100 members, while in 1899, ten years later, we had less than 600 paid members. Last year, after our World's Fair convention in St. Louis, we totaled only 889, or nearly twenty per cent less than fourteen years ago.

Now the increase in the number of persons engaged in ornamental horticulture during the past five years only has been twenty-five per cent, and during fifteen years probably over fifty per cent. This shows that our society has fallen short from forty to seventy-five per cent of its rightful increase, and has gained nothing from the recent enormous growth in floriculture and general horticulture.

It is conceded that the increased public interest in our chosen work during the year just past is unprecedented; some say that one-third more people are taking an interest in gardening today than ever before. This is true of both rich and poor. Add to this the civic improvement work and school garden movement.

I appeal both to those who appreciate what this society has done and to those (if there be such) who believe we are not meeting present opportunities, to be present with us at this convention.

Am I justified in claiming that the Society of American Florists needs your presence at Washington, August 15, to decide how we may wisely meet these wonderfully enlarged demands on our profession; how we may appeal directly to all these growing interests; how we may increase as a society in proportion to horticultural increase; how we may continue to be nationally what we have been; how we all may, commercially and for public good, take advantage of this floodtide of horticultural awakening which is upon us?

Your part is to come to the convention. Your membership fee is nothing; your presence is everything.

The visit will be a recreation and a benefit. The result will be an inspiration to others, and a duty performed.

Come and bring a friend.

J. C. VAUGHAN, President.

Convention Program.

The business program stands as published in the REVIEW two weeks ago. The address of welcome will be at 2 p. m. Tuesday, delivered by Commissioner McFarland.

The first social feature will be the president's reception, on the lawn of Andrew Loeffler, at 7:30 Tuesday evening. There will be refreshments and music.

Wednesday, immediately after the morning session, the ladies are invited to luncheon by the wife of the vice-president, Mrs. J. R. Freeman, at 612 Thirteenth street, three squares from Convention hall. This will be followed by a carriage drive.

The men's bowling takes place Wednesday afternoon.

At 9 a. m. Thursday there will be a trolley ride. At 2 p. m. cars will be on hand to take the gunners and friends to the grounds of the Analoston Gun Club. At the same hour the ladies will bowl at the Y. M. C. A. alleys.

Friday at 9 a. m. there will be an exhibition drill by the Engineer Corps on the White Lot, the exhibition there being considered a very fine compliment to the visitors. The balance of the day will be in the hands of the Baltimore Florists' Club, who promise to make it a day long to be remembered.

Immortelle Flag.

The following are the rules and regulations for the Bayersdorfer prize of $25 for the best American flag made of immortelles tied on toothpicks or otherwise. Brading will not be admitted in this contest:

1—The entrance fee will be $5 to pay for hall space.

2—The flag is to be not more than six feet nor less than five feet ten inches in length.

3—The style of flag to be left to the discretion of the exhibitor.

Bench of the New Single Red Geranium, Tiffin, in 3-inch Pots.

GERANIUM TIFFIN.

About eight years ago we found a number of seedling geraniums under a bench on which a new set of imported geraniums had grown, bloomed and seed ripened, which fell to the ground and grew. One of these seedlings made an unusually clean, healthy growth, branching very freely, of a medium dwarf habit, and at once commenced blooming, producing large trusses of blossoms, of a brilliant, dazzling scarlet. We have grown it every year since and it has proven itself to be an excellent geranium in all respects, good bedder, splendid pot plant both in and out of the house and always in bloom. In the field where our various stock plants are bedded out it is an easy matter to pick out the rows of this seedling, which we have named Tiffin. It has clean foliage, no zone, and the flowers are very mumerous, borne well above the foliage on stiff stems. We have in the past few years sold the plants to our home customers as Ullrich's Seedling and all who have had it once want it again, owing to its blooming quality, in preference to any other variety we grow.

One of the accompanying pictures shows one of the plants, another shows a bench of plants in 3-inch pots and the other is a picture of the front view of my residence and lawn decorated with large pots of Tiffin, showing its great blooming qualities as an outdoor pot plant.

CANADIANS MEET.

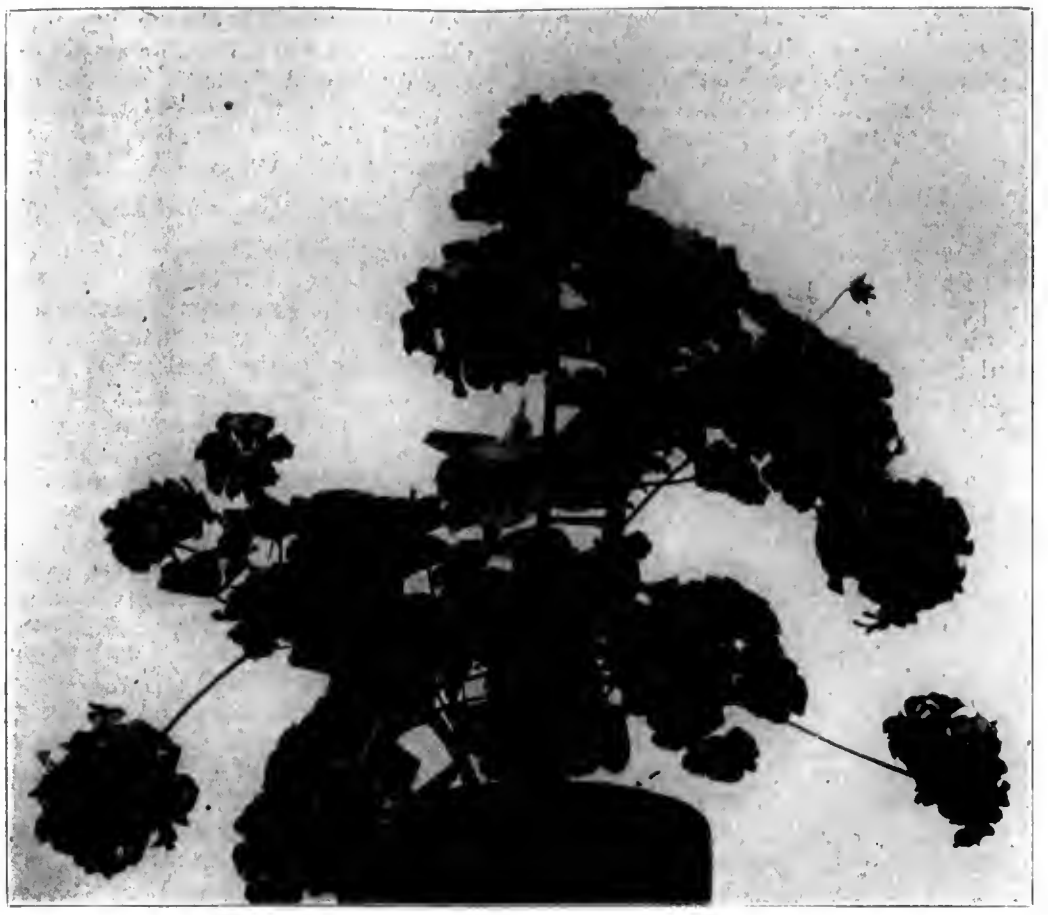
The eighth annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association is on this week at Montreal. The attendance is the largest in the history of the association and the trade exhibit does much to add to the interest.

The opening session was called to order at 2 p. m. on Tuesday, August 8, Mayor Laporte, the city's chief executive, being present to extend a welcome to the society. The response was by Wm. Gammage, of London, who thanked his worship for his kind words and the extended invitation to drive and luncheon on Thursday morning.

President George Robinson, of Outremont, then assumed the chair and read his annual address, which appears in full in this issue. It provoked a lively discussion, particularly on the tariff question. While there was difference of opinion, there was agreement that the tariff should be remodeled from a florist's viewpoint. It was so recommended to the tariff commission. The matter of a trade paper was left to a committee to discuss with the editor of the Canadian horticultural magazine.

The reports of secretary, treasurer and committees showed the society to be in a very prosperous condition. The judges of the trade exhibits recommended that certificates be awarded D. J. Sinclair, Toronto, for florists' supplies, and to Campbell Bros., Simcoe, for new varieties of gladioli. Diplomas were recommended for Hall & Robinson and Dupuy & Ferguson.

On Tuesday evening there was a session devoted to essays by Frederick G. Todd, Thos. McHugh and R. Burrows. These were very interesting and freely discussed.



COLD STORAGE LILIES.

I would like to know if cold-storage longiflorums planted the first week in August will be in flower for Christmas. Our house runs about 55 degrees in zero weather.

J. O.

Your lilies will be in before Christmas if you planted them the first week in August. For Christmas it is usually counted that ten to twelve weeks should be allowed from cold storage to flower. Planted ten weeks before Thanksgiving you are likely to have to hold them back if you want them for that date and we have very much bright, warm weather.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

[The following is the address of President Robinson, read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, at Montreal, August 8.]

Allow me in presenting this, the seventh annual address of a president of the Canadian Horticultural Association, to congratulate you on the progress which has been made since our last meeting in this city. Then there were only four members in attendance from the great west and very few from other parts of our vast Dominion. Today the west has sent representatives from almost every town and city and the east has distinguished itself beyond our most sanguine expectations. We have a representative from far away Newfoundland, which goes to show that the society is extending its usefulness and making itself felt throughout and outside the Dominion, but while we are exercising such an influence over a certain class of our profession, I feel that the society's usefulness could be very much extended. Up to the present I may say the association has been solely and wholly a trade organization, and I would like in the near future to see our profession, in all its branches, better represented than heretofore.

Interest the Gardeners.

This could be accomplished in several ways. The private gardeners, for instance, do not receive any direct benefit from attending our convention. They cannot make a trade exhibit, as the florist can, and consequently apart from the social part of the program they are practically lookers-on. The committee this year is to be congratulated upon devoting so much of the program to landscape and private gardening, but even this is not sufficient. The landscape public and private gardeners have no doubt inculcated a love of flowers into the hearts of thousands of people, thereby creating a larger demand for flowers year by year. Consequently the florists reap the reward of the gardeners' work, so we should reciprocate and help one another to the utmost of our ability. I believe this society should substantially recognize the work of our fellow-craftsmen by the awarding of suitable medals or certificates, to be competed for at our annual convention by private gardeners. I earnestly hope some action will be taken at this meeting or by the executive committee during the coming year to formulate and carry into effect this recommendation.

Recognition of Novelties.

I would like to call your attention to the necessity of a registration bureau, where new introductions in plants or flowers, whether raised here or brought into this country, can be judged, registered and a complete record kept of all such exhibits. At the present time the originator of new varieties is sadly handicapped in having no such committee to send his introductions to and consequently has to wait until a local flower show is in progress to get his fellow craftsmen's opinion on his product. This branch of our profession is in its infancy now, but it is wise to get the machinery well oiled and in running order before needing it. I would respectfully suggest that a committee be appointed by this association, composed of three members in say Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and London, who could meet at stated intervals, or as necessity demanded, to judge any new rose or well-grown plants, flowers or anything pertaining to horticulture, with power to award medals, diplomas, certificates or whatever award the exhibit should merit. This would entail very little time and trouble on the part of the committee and would be an incentive to the Canadian hybridists and raisers of novelties to improve the existing varieties now in cultivation.

Trade Conditions.

From information I have gathered I am satisfied that the past season has compared favorably, as far as profits are concerned, with former seasons. Prices to the growers have been good and good flowers and plants have been in steady demand. Considering the enormous amount of glass which has been added to our commercial places throughout the country in the last few years, it is really surprising where the product is disposed of. There was scarcely a time where there was a glut in the market and oftentimes a scarcity of flowers, especially of good flowers. Not only is the demand increasing, but the demand for quality is increasing also, thereby showing that our business is becoming more a necessity than a luxury every year and is taking its rightful place in the commerce of the country. The plant trade has been very good, especially at the holiday season. Plants are slowly but surely gaining in public favor. This can be accounted for by the fact that every year more plants are grown and of infinitely better quality than ever before. There is no fear of plants taking the place of cut flowers, for while the demand has increased enormously of late years for plants, the demand for cut flowers has increased accordingly. There is probably more money in growing cut flowers than in growing plants, but the florist doing a retail business will certainly come out on top by growing a stock of good plants in variety.

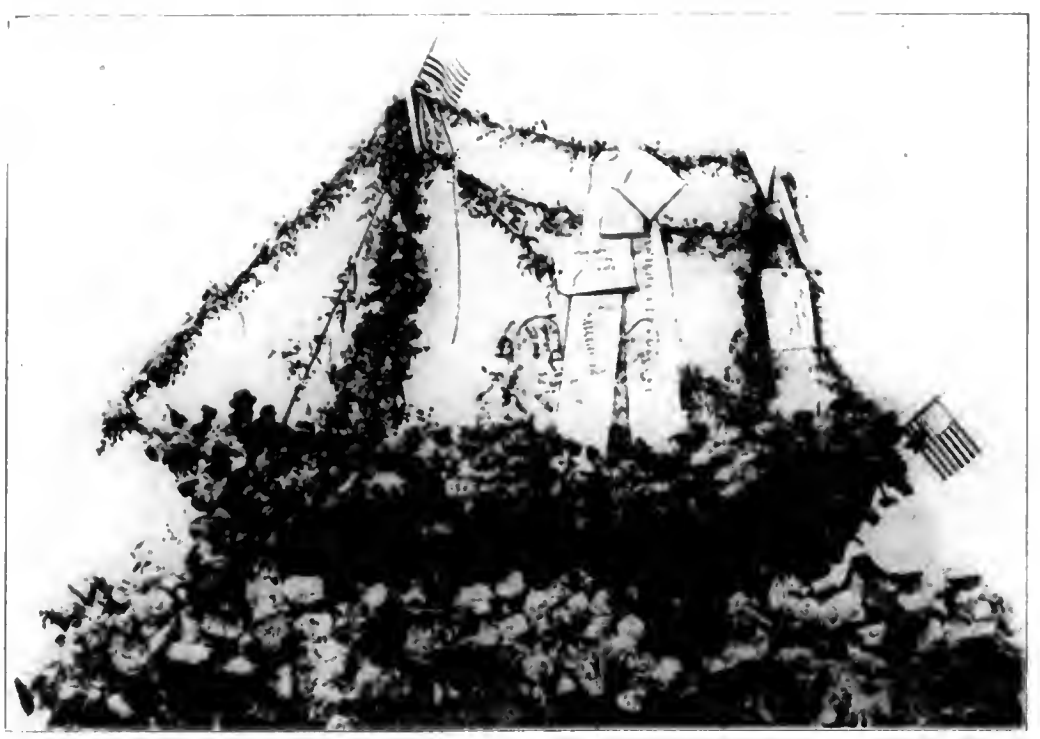
The bedding plant trade this year exceeded all expectations. A larger quantity than ever was grown, but all were sold out before the demand was exhausted. It is in this particular class of trade that we feel the necessity of uniform prices. This subject is a rather difficult one to handle, but after we have heard Mr. McKenna's paper we will probably find a solution of this much discussed subject.

The demand for shrubs and herbaceous plants is increasing rapidly. Many new residences are being built in the suburbs of our cities and the growing demand is for some plant that will not need renewing every year. I would advise all florists with land at their disposal to lay in a stock of these useful plants and to be prepared to meet the demand.



A Demise.

I am sorry to have to announce the demise of our trade paper. A Canadian paper is admitted by all to be a necessity. The Canadian Florist, while in circulation, was soundly abused, perhaps deservedly so, but when it disappeared it was sadly missed. I do not think a trade paper would for a few years pay its expenses, and like any other young business, it could hardly be expected to do so, but in a few years' time I feel certain a Canadian paper would be a paying concern. We have plenty of able writers and all we require is an editor who can command the respect and confidence of the trade in general. We have been very unfortunate in the selection of our editors in the past and I would advise discretion before this matter is officially disposed of. The reading matter in such a paper is certainly its chief attraction but the benefits to be derived by the Canadian florist is from the advertisements. There are wholesale houses all over our Dominion which can supply the Canadian trade with all the staple articles required, but who, unfortunately, have not the means of letting their brother florists know what they have to dispose of. Again a florist wants to buy a certain class of plants, but he has no means of finding out where he can procure them in Canada; consequently, he looks up his trade papers, which happen to be American; sends good money out of the country, pays the duty and is thankful for whatever he can get. Now, gentlemen, reciprocity is a word which is unknown to our neighbors to the south of us and the sooner we recognize the fact that Canada is for Canadians the sooner will our trade, our paper and our organization be successful.

The Tariff.

A resolution was passed at our last convention with reference to the question of duty on plants. Your committee did all in their power to carry out the wishes of the association. Our minister promised to get the matter put through the house immediately and several local members promised their hearty support, but, unfortunately, the last elections were too close and the next general elections too far away for us to get anything but promises. Anyhow the resolution created a good discussion in our trade paper and brought out a diversity of opinion among the members of the craft.

You are all aware that a tariff commission has been appointed to go the round of the cities this fall to discuss this subject with all branches of trade. Now I would respectfully suggest that the members of this society drop their party politics for the time being and discuss the tariff question from a business standpoint. It is entirely necessary that there be a uniformity of opinion before we can impress upon the commission the desirability of arrangement of duties on plants.

Labor Question.

While the labor question has been very unsettled in nearly all branches of trade, I am glad to say the relation between employer and employe in our profession has remained satisfactory. True, there is a scarcity of intelligent native help and we have to depend almost entirely on immigrants for our greenhouse help, but as our business increases and the possibilities of advancement are better known this matter will right itself.

The Trade Exhibits.

The trade exhibits in connection with our annual conventions are, I am glad to say, growing rapidly in extent and importance. The members of the association are shown the quality of the stock grown right in our own country. The exhibitors may be disappointed at not receiving a lot of orders immediately, but the exhibits will be impressed upon the minds of the delegates and when they require a certain stock they know just where to obtain it without going out of the country. Certificates and diplomas are in the hands of the association, and I hope the judges will award them generously but with discretion. This will also enhance the value of the trade exhibit.

I would again call your attention to the fact that a printed copy of the complete doings of the Canadian Horticultural Association convention, as well as awards of the various committees, would be a boon to all the members, not only as a reference, but if nicely printed would be worth preserving as a memento and record of past conventions.

Future of the Society.

A place of meeting for our convention next year should be seriously considered before a choice is made. We have visited all the large cities and the prevailing idea is to meet in one of the smaller towns. The argument is that it will stimulate horticulture in these towns. But will it be in the best interests of the society? Will the members attend the convention in a small town as well as they would in a city where there are other attractions, apart from the sessions? The prosperity of the association depends entirely upon its membership. The association is in a flourishing condition, thanks to the hard work of officers and members for the past seven years, but there is still a lot of missionary work needed. I would certainly like to see more activity among our members. A little effort by each would materially increase our membership. There is no reason why we should not double our membership next year. When we consider that there are fully 600 engaged in our business, it is strange that so few take advantage of the benefits to be derived from a national society. No member should rest until every member of the craft is enrolled upon our books and every florist throughout the country should be made to see the benefits arising from being a member of this organization and attending the conventions.

The thanks of the association are due the members of the executive committee, who have spent time and money attending the committee meetings and looking after the interests of the society since the last convention. They have been greatly handicapped lately by having no trade paper in which to discuss matters pertaining to the association. This has necessitated a large amount of correspondence, but this work has been done by them with a will, showing that they have the cause at heart. The result of their work and deliberations is now before you and I hope will be dealt with as it deserves.

I must also congratulate the members of this association on the interest they have always manifested in our meetings. The sessions have at all times been well attended, papers given an attentive hearing, followed by animated discussions, which invariably bring out the best points on any subject. I would ask each and every member to keep up the reputation of our association, take part in all debates, and if you have a question you would like answered don't be afraid to ask it, either verbally or through the question box. It will be cheerfully answered by practical men. Give strict attention to business during the session and the local committee will see that you give strict attention to pleasure during the entertaining part of the program. A program has been arranged that I hope will prove interesting and valuable to each and every one and may you leave this city feeling that this convention has been interesting, instructive and another link in the chain of good-fellowship among all members of the craft in our Dominion.

JENSEN GETS PLACE.

The West Park commissioners at Chicago have appointed Jens Jensen superintendent of their entire system. Mr. Jensen first became connected with the west parks in Chicago about twenty years ago, handling the shovel and pick in construction work. He stayed with the parks until he became superintendent of Humboldt park, where he remained for a number of years, being removed for political reasons. Since his retirement he has been practicing landscape architecture and has done much work in the vicinity of Lake Geneva, which locality bears largely the impress of his skill in the profession in which he is self-educated.

Mr. Jensen goes back to the west parks free from political influence. He is promised a free hand in rejuvenating the system, which shows the result of a number of years of party domination. He may be expected to work a great improvement in horticultural as well as administrative matters.

Mr. Jensen is a native of Denmark. He came of farming parents but had a horticultural education in the schools of Germany and Denmark. On coming to this country he was located first in the south and later in the west but his residence has been in Chicago so many years and his principal work has been here, so that he may be claimed as a strictly Chicago product.

BRANTFORD, ONT.—T. A. Ivey reports trade quiet at present but that there is every prospect for another good season throughout Canada.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Robert Bowlder is very busy just now, with building operations and planting. He hopes to get everything finished up in good shape before the convention.

GRANDVILLE, MICH.—The Stover Floral Co. reports that wet weather for almost two months has seriously interfered with outdoor work. The ground has seldom been dry enough to cultivate and weeds are flourishing. Geraniums and salvias show the effect of the wet more than other stock.

THE BERMUDA LILY CULTURE.

The chief industry in Bermuda is lily farming (Lilium longiflorum and the variety Harrisii), although the lily disease has been so prevalent of late years that many farmers have been compelled to give up growing these plants. This disease has given the British government endless trouble, and nothing has been discovered up to the present that will effectually exterminate the disease, although its ravages have been stopped to a great extent by spraying with Bordeaux mixture.

The ground is cultivated for planting the bulbs in August, after having been allowed to lie fallow during the summer months, although in some cases it is utilized for growing melons in order to keep the ground free from grass. A few years ago the experiment of growing tobacco for a summer crop was tried, but was soon abandoned, as the growers asserted that the crop took more nourishment from the soil than the tobacco was worth, and that they had to spend all the money derived from the sale of the tobacco to purchase manure for the lilies. In the experimental station nothing but farmyard manure was used when the ground was prepared for lily culture, and this consisted of as large a proportion of cow manure as possible, as the soil in Bermuda is sandy and porous.

The lilies are propagated by separating the scales from the bulb, and placing these in drills at a depth of three inches, allowing four inches between the individual scales. This operation is generally carried out during the first week in September, and by the following June these scales form small bulbs one to one and one-half inches in circumference, when they are dug up, dried, and stored away in sand until the following September, when they are again planted in the ground in rows drawn three inches apart, allowing two inches between the bulbs in the rows. After a season's growth they are dug up about June, by which time they are from three to four inches in circumference. The following season they attain a size of from five to seven inches in circumference, which is the smallest marketable size; and they increase their growth until they reach a size of from eleven to thirteen inches in circumference, after which they do not increase in size, but deteriorate and split into bulbils.

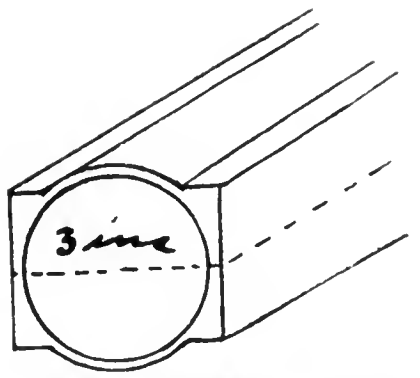
It is when the bulb starts into growth that the disease puts in its appearance, and it is at this time that spraying operations are conducted. The method of preparing the fungicide is as follows: Three fifty-gallon barrels are obtained, one for holding the mixture, and the other two for mixing purposes. In each of the two latter barrels twenty-five gallons of water are placed; in the one case four pounds of copper-sulphate is added, and in the other six pounds of quicklime. When the sulphate of copper and the lime have dissolved, the contents of the two barrels are poured at the same time into the stock-barrel, which process insures proper mixing. The mixture is then ready for spraying. It is always better to spray the plants the first thing in the morning and the last thing in the evening. The lilies are sprayed before there is any appearance of the disease, and also at intervals throughout the growing season.

The farmer, as a rule, sells his bulbs in advance, before he puts them in the ground, there being such a demand for good, true bulbs. When these large growers notice a diseased bulb in their batch they dig it out and burn it. The experimental station advises, after digging out the diseased bulb, that the vacant place be sprinkled with crushed sulphate of iron; this kills any remaining spores that may be left in the soil.

The small growers, and several of these are Portuguese, mix diseased bulbs with the good ones, and sell to the commission man, who buys his bulbs ready dug up on the ground, and employs men to pack them. These men also mix their bulbs, putting the true variety Harrisii and the longiflorum together, and selling the mixture as true Harrisii. This is a great disadvantage when forcing the bulbs with the intention of obtaining flowers for Christmas, as the Harrisii variety will flower by Christmas, but the longiflorums are a week or two later in flowering. Another great mistake on the farmers' part is to dig up the lilies before the bulbs are ripe, as unripe bulbs are not fit for forcing. For instance, only last January I went to see some private gardens in Newport, R. I., U. S. A., where they annually force large quantities for Christmas. One Scotch gardener told me that a batch he had just started was diseased, and that his Christmas batch also turned out diseased. I informed him they were not diseased, but unripe, and that they would not stand forcing. I know of several similar cases where unripe bulbs have been pronounced diseased.



To conclude, I would advise any who force bulbs to dip them before they are potted into a solution of weak permanganate of potash; this kills the spores of the disease in the bulb. Again, when the lilies have commenced growing in the pots, spray at intervals with Bordeaux mixture; the spray leaves a bluish sediment on the foliage. This can be easily removed by syringing with clear water; but allow it to remain on as long as possible.—Geo. Chisholm, in the Gardeners' Chronicle.

SOLID BEDS VS. BENCHES.

As a constant reader of your paper, and presuming upon the good nature of your editors, I wish to ask for information and what in your judgment is the general experience with relation to the desirability of solid beds in greenhouses erected for cut flowers, and what is the consensus of opinion among flower growers as to the advantages or disadvantages of solid beds as against frame structures and whether, in your opinion, many have abandoned the solid beds and gone back to the other style.

Also I would like to know whether it is desirable ordinarily to run steam pipes through the center of the beds where they are constructed of cement.

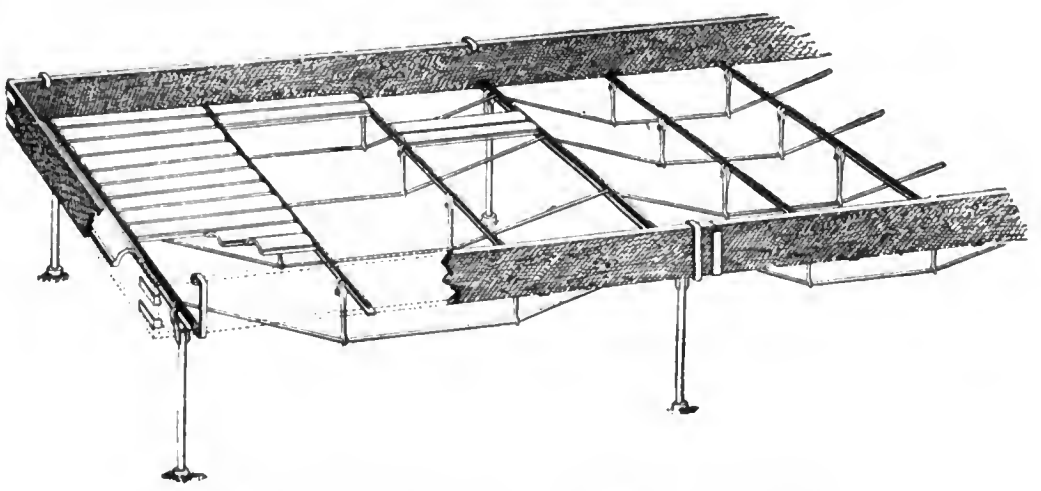
L. P. T.

Tile Used for Bench Bottoms.

Regarding this inquiry, I have endeavored to get a consensus of opinion among growers and find the majority are using the table or raised bench. Some very successful growers are still using the solid bench in its varied forms and are earnest advocates in its favor, while others, equally successful, are just as strong in their advocacy of table benches. I may say, however, that I have confined my inquiries principally to rose growers, getting their opinions as to the most suitable style of bench and their reasons for their selection.

The objections to the various forms of solid bench may be summed up thus: In solid benches of whatever design the claim is made that the grower is unable to control the temperature of the soil below a specified depth, whereas, in raised benches the air of the house by having contact with the soil, both above and below, equalizes the temperature of the soil, thus leaving the control in the hands of the grower.

It is also frequent with solid benches that the roots dip into the subsoil, or drainage ,when the food may be unsuitable and thus cause damage. From my own experience I am convinced that solid benches do not respond so quickly as raised benches.



I have yet to hear of a favorable reply to the query as to the advisability of carrying pipes through the centers of cement benches and would strongly advise against this method, and particularly in rose benches, as I have never seen roses do well when so treated.

The old style table bench made entirely of lumber, while serving its purpose fairly well, had the great drawback of requiring too much repairing, and this repair work had to be done when the benches were empty and was a sore hindrance at planting time, the delay thus caused curtailing the growing season and upsetting the interior of the house every second or third year.

To obviate this delay and get rid of the continual repairs necessary where the bottoms were wood, tiles were substituted for boards with marked success. The drainage being more perfect and natural, this method found favor with most growers, but as we are never content, there are still coming newer styles, each and every one claiming to be the best and, having to erect more glass this season, I have been looking over the latest designs with a view to secure the best.

The accompanying illustration is from a design of the King Construction Co. and which, in my opinion, is nearest the ideal of anything I have seen, being neat, easily erected, substantial and practically indestructible and in cost of construction compares favorably with any of the existing styles of either solid or raised benches. The materials for this bench, iron and tile, will cost about 11 cents per square foot and the cost of labor about 1 cent per square foot, but of course the cost of material depends a good deal on location and where the tiles can be obtained.

The bottom of the bench on which the tiles are placed is the upper side of a trussed beam; the under side is formed by iron rods on tension. The bench bottom is composed of half or split tiles of the shape shown in the smaller illustration. These tiles are three inches in diameter and come whole but may be split along the dotted line, thus making two half tiles two inches high and form one of the best materials to stand compression. They cost about 2 cents per square foot of space.

Tile-Bottomed Bench with Trussed Iron Supports.

A Part of Peter Reinberg's Range of 1,200,000 Feet of Glass.—Photographed by Leonard Kill.

The side boards, which may be of wood, tile or cement slabs, do their share of the work also, the intermediate cross tee irons being cut so that a flat surface catches on the lower edge of the side board, which is held down by hook irons at the main cross ties.

As the tiles run lengthwise of the bench, the width of the bench can readily be varied by the width of one tile, four inches.

The bench being practically all iron and tile leaves no lodgment for vermin.

The posts for supporting the bench are placed six inches in from the side, thus leaving ample room for hanging the heating pipes and can, for stability, be bedded in concrete, but the whole structure, when properly erected, is stable enough if set on any kind of a solid foundation. RIBES.

THE WATER HYACINTH.

Will you not give us a short history of the water hyacinth, how it was brought to the south and from where, also what the government is doing toward its destruction? I think it would be very interesting reading to quite a few. G. K.

Eichhornia speciosa, the water hyacinth, the "million-dollar weed," is a native of tropical South America. It was known in 1879 and has been cultivated for many years in northern collections of tender aquatic plants, where its odd form and freely produced light blue flowers never fail of attention and admiration. Since the plant became a pest in southern waters the United States government has expended great sums of money in the study of the plant and measures for its destruction, but nothing accurate has been learned as to how the plant was introduced to the localities where it is now so much at home. As nearly as can be determined it was first put into the St. Johns river, in Florida, by the draining of a pond in which it had been grown for ornament. In the river they grew luxuriantly and multiplied rapidly. At that time no one had any idea that the plant would become a nuisance and it was carried to many other places by those who liked it.

The water hyacinth commonly floats without attachment to the soil and thus moves from place to place with the winds or currents, being supported well above the water by the air chambers caused by the peculiar swelling of the basal portions of the leaf-stalks. The propagation by stolons is very rapid and this, coupled with the fact that the plants travel, causes them to spread over nearly all bodies of sluggish fresh water to which it in any manner becomes introduced. The trouble with the plant usually comes from accumulations of the floating plants, which often are sufficiently impregnable to stop screw and sidewheel steamboats and sometime even paddle-wheel boats.

The Department of Agriculture has made many tests to determine how the water hyacinth can be destroyed. Several purely mechanical means were tried, removing the plants and clearing the water, but it was found that the pest speedily became as bad as ever, possibly growing from seeds left in the water. Gasoline, salt and various poisons were found to kill the plants but to the use of each there is a serious objection. In 1897 the Department set forth its findings in a bulletin in which the writer said: "On the whole I am forced to the conclusion that the eradication of the water hyacinth is impracticable; furthermore, those who have given the matter candid consideration mostly agree in this opinion."

This seems to have ended the matter with the Department of Agriculture, or at least it offers nothing of later date, but the War Department, which is brought into the matter by its control over navigable waters, is continuing the battle against this pest. For the past two years the Engineer's Office of the War Department has been operating with considerable success with a chemical prepared by the Harvesta Chemical Co., of New Orleans.

BOSTON.

The Market.

A fairly good market has been experienced of late. The quantity of flowers coming in has not been heavy, but ample for requirements. In roses Beauties, Kaiserins and Carnots of good quality are seen. These bring very fair prices. Carnations are quite small. The top price is $1.50, poorer stock going as low as 40 cents to 50 cents. Sweet peas have improved a little in quality since we had recent rains, and sell quite well. Asters are abundant and the quality is extra good, whites of course being in best demand for funeral work. Some good gladioli come in, also Lilium longiflorum, auratum and speciosum. These sell from $6 to $10 per hundred.

Various Notes.

It looks as if a delegation of fifty will leave Boston for the convention. Some are on the fence about going, too busy housing carnations, etc. A good representation from the Hub is, however, certain.

A. H. Hews & Co. have just placed on the market a very neat and serviceable perforated earthenware saucer for supporting melons grown under glass, similar to what are largely used in England.

June bug larvæ are causing great destruction to lawns this season, many being entirely ruined. The pest seems to be especially bad in and around Boston.

A meeting of "ornamental horticulturists" who are affiliated with the Gardeners' and Florists' Club will be held at Horticultural hall on August 12 to talk over S. A. F. matters. An effort will be made to rouse interest in the national body.

T. J. Allen, of Lewiston, Me., formerly at Poland Springs, was in town this week buying stock for fall. He reports business as quite satisfactory.

A syndicate of wealthy Bostonians will erect eight large houses at Halifax, Mass., to be devoted to flowers and vegetables.

The Plant Estate.

The gardeners' committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, who visited the Plant estate, Groton, Conn., on August 4, spent a very enjoyable day. Great improvements were noted in all departments since the time of the previous visit on this fine new estate. In the greenhouses three houses of single-stem chrysanthemums were in grand shape and should be strongly in evidence at the New York and Boston shows. Among the new sorts Mrs. W. Duckham looked exceptionally well, also Emily Mileham, Mlle. Jeannie Nonin, Mrs. J. A. Miller and others. Among the older sorts W. Duckham, Henry Barnes and many more were looking fine. Carnations have been housed five weeks and were growing nicely, as were roses. Two divisions of grapes were carrying their first crop of finely finished fruit. Black Hamburg and Muscat of Alexandria were mostly grown. Two other divisions were occupied by nectarines and peaches. Quite a few orchids are being grown. A batch of calanthes looked extra well.

The formal garden contained a good selection of tender and herbaceous plants, which made a capital showing. Numerous bay trees and hydrangeas in tubs are used for piazza decoration. Other features inspected were a new rock garden, vegetable garden and a general utility garden, where flowers for cutting and early vegetables are grown. Thomas W. Head, the superintendent, had everything in good condition. The committee was generously entertained by Mrs. Morton F. Plant, in the unavoidable absence of Commodore Plant.

Exhibition.

The first of the weekly shows to be held during August provided an interesting exhibition on August 5. Perennial phloxes and herbaceous plants were quite extensively shown. For the former H. A. Stevens Co. and Blue Hill Nurseries took prizes in the order named. Quality of spikes was not up to the average, the date set being too late. George Hollis also made a display of phloxes. Blue Hill Nurseries were easily first for thirty varieties of herbaceous flowers, Bay State Nurseries being second. Each of these exhibitors also made large honorary displays of hardy flowers, an extensive collection also coming from Harvard Botanic Gardens, Robert Cameron, gardener, and filling three large tables.

Mrs. L. Towle had a collection of dahlias in eighty-four varieties and Joseph Thorpe thirty varieties of sweet peas. Mrs. E. M. Gill had a general display of seasonable flowers. The Blue Hill Nurseries received first-class certificates for the new Tritonias (Monbretias) Germanica and Geo. Davidson. Fruit and vegetables were largely shown and the Mycological Society had a nice lot of mushrooms.

Death of J. S. Richards.

John Salter Richards, better known to many in Brookline as "Uncle Dick," died on August 3 at the age of 94. He was believed to be the oldest florist in Massachusetts, if not in the country, and with only his pet parrot, Tommy, to keep him company had lived in a little, old-fashioned, white house with green blinds near the entrance to the Country Club grounds in Brookline.

His history was an eventful one. Born at Cullompton, Devonshire, England, on June 10, 1811, he came to America while quite young. As a youth he drove for the widow of Alexander Hamilton in New York. He knew the first Cornelius Vanderbilt when the latter was a poor ferryman. Coming to Boston he served as coachman for a time, but catching the gold fever went to California in 1850. Returning to New York he was employed for some time by the banking firm of Burgoyne & Co.

In 1855 he returned to Boston with $4,200 in twenty-dollar gold pieces in a canvas belt strapped to his waist. He went to Brookline and purchased four acres of land on which he made his home the rest of his life. For many years he grew flowers, plants and vegetables for the Boston market and for a period of over twenty years was a regular exhibitor at the exhibitions in Horticultural hall, receiving numerous premiums, some for varieties of flowers of his own raising.

Since 1859 the parrot, Tommy, had been his inseparable friend. One of his last requests was that the bird should share the same grave with him. His wish was complied with, the parrot being chloroformed an hour before the funeral and was lowered into the same grave with its master. A large number of people attended the funeral on August 7. W. N. Craig.

DENVER.

The Market.

The summer quietness now existing is bare of interesting facts, although there have been several funerals demanding quantities of flowers and, as stock is plentiful and not expensive, this business is received with much satisfaction.

The supply of carnations has shortened considerably and those arriving are not of very good quality, with the exception of White Lawson. Prices range from $1 to $3 for the better grades. The better grades of Brides and Maids are scarce, Chatenay being more in evidence and of good quality. Roses from young stock are beginning to make an appearance, although as yet they have no length of stem. American Beauty roses are not over-plentiful, the demand consuming the supply coming in. The quality is excellent and prices have been firm. Sweet peas are still plentiful but are getting shorter stemmed. Early varieties of asters are now seen in fairly large quantities and of fair quality. Gladioli and dahlias are also on the market.

Various Notes.

The recent visitors were C. Frauenfelder, Chicago; W. P. Kyle, of Kennicott Bros. Co., Chicago; A. Elkon, of the Botanical Decorating Co., Chicago; W. H. Woemer, of Omaha, calling on the trade with florists' wire designs.

J. A Valentine and B. E. Gillis, of the Park Floral Co., left Sunday for the east, intending to visit several of the eastern cities before arriving at Washington for the convention. They expect to be gone three weeks.

Miss G. E. Page has returned from her vacation to California. E. S. K.

Utica, N. Y.—George Boyce had a nice specimen of Cereus grandiflorus in bloom one night recently and made quite an advertisement of it by inviting his customers and others to his greenhouses to see the ever-interesting flower. The "function" was given considerable space in the local papers, one of them noting that the night blooming cereus "resembles a cactus."

RETAILERS' ADVERTISING.

Keep A-Pushing.

One step won't take you very far;
You've got to keep on walking.
One word won't tell folks all you are;
You've got to keep on talking.
One inch won't make you very tall;
You've got to keep on growing.
One little "ad." won't do it all;
You've got to keep 'em going.
—Saturday Evening Post.

The retail florists everywhere are taking an increased interest in the subject of advertising cut flowers and plants. The reproduction of a number of retailers' advertisements in a recent issue of the Review has brought to the editor's desk a large number of clippings of advertisements used by other retailers. A few of these are reproduced on the opposite page in this issue. Some are distinctly good and will afford other retailers an idea which they can use to their own advantage. Any of these advertisements is better than none at all, although to the view of the professional advertising man those which do not quote a price would not be considered as strong as they might otherwise be. However, Murtfeld, whose card is as small and inconspicuous as any in the lot, writes that its publication once a week in the leading paper of Minneapolis has resulted in a distinct increase in his trade.

An illustration is always a desirable feature of an advertisement, particularly where the space occupied is not large, but the principal endeavor should be after attracting the eye of the reader, to convince him that here is offered something desirable which is not beyond the reader's means. The great advance of the flower business must be due to the increasing use of flowers by people of moderate means. Few retailers have patronage among the multi-millionaries. Most of us must look to the common people for our business, and these are the ones whom we should seek to disabuse of the idea that flowers are an expensive luxury. And they are the ones most susceptible to the influence of advertisements.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The weather is very unfavorable to the handling of flowers, and business except occasional spurts of funeral work, is practically dead.

Mr. Melis, on Jefferson avenue, will build a carnation house. He is this season running the greenhouses himself; last year it was on shares with Frank Strong.

The Grand Rapids Floral Co. is building a residence for Will Hannah.

Geo. F. Crabb is recovering from an attack of appendicitis.

Clarence Hills is putting in a new style of cement bench. G. F. C.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The store of A. B. Loofbourow, 376 Grove street, was burglarized August 5. The store was ransacked and $30 stolen from the cash register.

McKeesport, Pa.—Those persons who were concerned in the recent raid on the greenhouse of the McKeesport Floral Co., which raid came about through a practical joke, and who entered into an agreement with McKeesport Floral Co. to make a settlement, each to pay his share of the damage, amounting to about $200 in all, have been released from all responsibility.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Since my last report the cut flower trade has not improved very much. There was quite a lot of funeral work the past week, which helped the local trade greatly, and the wholesalers were relieved of some of their surplus in white flowers, which have been, and are, very plentiful. Everything in the market is going at extremely low prices. Asters are arriving in great quantities. The very choicest bring fair prices, but the bulk of them are sold in 1,000 lots as low as $2.50. Gladioli are a great glut and are not moving at any price. Light colors only are selling. Other colors are generally dumped. The same may be said of tuberose spikes. All the commission men are loaded down with them. The great bulk of them are of the Armstrong ever-blooming variety. The doubles are not nearly so plentiful.

Fancy carnations are out of the question at present. There are plenty of shorts in the market. The best quality seem to be white. In roses there is a good supply of all kinds and of very good quality, with clean foliage. Kaiserins are especially fine, also Ivory. Cochet roses, white and pink, are more than enough for the demand. Lily of the valley, too, is quite plentiful. All outdoor stock is in great abundance, with a very light demand. In "greens" the market has everything that is needed just now.

Various Notes.

Mrs. A. C. Canfield, of Springfield, Ill., was a visitor the past week, calling on the trade.

Charles Young, of C. Young & Sons Co., left last week for the east to be gone six weeks. Wm. C. Young, of the same firm, in company with his oldest son, leaves this week for an eastern trip, including Washington during the convention week.

Robert J. Windler has opened his new store on Grand avenue. He reports considerable funeral work since opening.

Henry Lohrenz's new place on Park avenue will be opened this week. The place looks very attractive.

On South Broadway, Florists Heile, Kohrs and Diemer are having a flower war to see who can sell the cheapest, being one block apart.

Mrs. Fred Foster and family are enjoying the cool weather up north. Mr. Foster will join them next week. He will also make the Washington trip.

Vincent Gorley, of Grimm & Gorley, reports summer trade good both at 517 Olive street and Fifteenth and Cass avenue. Their new ice-box at the Olive street store is a beauty.

The new store of Frank Fillmore & Son, on Meramec street, is handsomely furnished. The location is good and the fall trade there should be fine.

The new firm of Pilcher & Burrows, brokers in florists' supplies, reports that it has orders for a number of greenhouses and boilers, also for supplies of all kinds.

There is quite a lot of building and improvement going on among the Kirkwood florists, and they are becoming quite numerous in that suburb.

The Eggeling Floral Co. had a big run of funeral work the past week. The company is making extensive improvements for the opening of the fall season.

Chas. C. Fleckenstein and John M. Hudson, formerly wholesale florists in this city, were callers recently. Both are doing well, but in other lines of business.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ellison are still among the northern lakes and are not expected home until September 1. This will keep Arthur Ellison away from the convention and the bowling club is very much weakened.

At one of our large funerals recently the number of cards handed in soliciting orders for flowers shows that crape pullers are becoming quite numerous about town again.

St. Louis to Washington.

The St. Louis delegation has decided to travel by way of Detroit, there to join the Chicago, Milwaukee and Detroit delegations on a special train to Washington. Our delegation will leave Sunday night, August 13, via Wabash. In this party, as it looks today, will be F. H. Meinhardt and wife, C. A. Kuehn and wife, F. M. Ellis and wife, John Steidel and wife, J. J. Beneke and wife, W. J. Pilcher, H. Lohrenz, Max Rotter, George Angermueller, A. S. Halstead, V. Gorley, George Waldbart, John Connor, Mr. Denecker and R. F. Tesson. Perhaps one or two others will fall in line at the club meeting Thursday of this week. The above delegation will be joined at Washington by the Misses Meinhardt, Theo. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Weber and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Kalisch, Chas. and Will Young, who are already in the east.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Summer Business.

Our retailers are now right in the midst of their best season of the whole year. Of course in a city like Newport there is a good floral business the year through, but it remains for the summer season to bring the rush of orders for luncheon, dinner, ball and in fact every possible form of decoration for the entertainments of the fashionable society people, of all the larger cities of the United States, who congregate here for the Newport season. The summer residents begin to come early in June, but it is July before they are all here; from then until after the horse show, in September, summer gayeties of every conceivable kind fill in the hours of both day and night, and as no entertainment here, however small, is ever planned without the florist, you can readily see how important to the craft is this summer business.

Every succeeding year our florists make more elaborate plans for this summer trade. Everything possible in seasonable stock is grown in enormous quantities, as when stock is needed for a large entertainment, say where $1,000 or more has been allotted for the flowers, immense amounts are used up even for one decoration, especially when outside of roses the bulk of all flowers at this season are outdoor grown and do not figure into money very fast. Sweet peas, snapdragon, hollyhocks, gladioli, lilies, lily of the valley, carnations, orchids, Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora, poppies and in fact everything fit for cutting that blooms between June and September are grown in blocks. Of course roses and dahlias are grown and used in enormous lots. Golden Glow, Coreopsis lanceolata, sunflowers, and all such stock works in splendidly for filling in on a large decoration where halls, piazzas, etc., are to be made presentable.

Sweet peas have had a great run, and while they have sold low, the market has kept fairly well cleaned up. The going price has been 25 cents a hundred wholesale, and 50 cents a hundred retail.

Our one great standby in the summer is the American Beauty rose and they have been coming especially good lately, the best go to customers at $6 a dozen. Orchids have been in short supply, good blooms of Cattleya gigas bringing $1.50 each if obtainable. Lily of the valley is in good supply and much used; the best brings $2.50 per bunch of twenty-five flowers. Auratum and speciosum lilies bring $3 and $2 per dozen respectively. Hollyhocks are offered in spikes for $5 a dozen and are of superb quality. There is a good supply of green stuff of all kinds.

Horticultural Society.

The Newport Horticultural Society has just closed perhaps the most successful year in its history, as there never has been a time when more interest has been manifested in its work, not only by its members but the public. Another matter that has brought the society into greater prominence, has been the decision of the members to hold the larger flower shows in the Newport Casino, which is the society center. The June show so held was a great success artistically and also financially and certainly brought the owners of our estates and their gardeners more closely in touch. Once let it become the thing for society to patronize our exhibitions and success for our shows is assured.

Various Notes.

For years our gardeners have devoted much time and care to the cultivation of hybrid tea roses, as they need roses of this class for the many house decorations they are constantly making. The new hybrid tea, Frau Karl Druschki, has proved itself perfectly hardy here and a perpetual bloomer. The flowers are large, perfectly formed, and open well. In color it is snow-white, with shell-shaped petals. The plant is strong and very vigorous; it is pronounced here by all who have seen it as an ideal white rose. Paul Volquardson, gardener to Mrs. William G. Weld, has been especially successful with it.

How true it is that the great beauty and easy cultivation of many of our hardy herbaceous perennials are very little appreciated. All the campanulas are of the easiest growth, and when taken care of make elegant, showy plants. A group of these bellflowers which was most attractive was shown at the recent exhibition by William G. Postings, gardener to Hon. Winthrop Chanler.

If nothing in the way of a severe storm occurs there will next month be one of the grandest lots of dahlias in bloom ever seen here since the dahlia craze has taken possession of us all. The improved cactus types are mostly grown, although all kinds are well represented. There is also much interest in growing seedlings.

Zero.

Pierre, S. D.—Enoe & Barney feel well pleased with the way business is opening for them. The field is a good one and the use of plants and flowers is constantly increasing. They contemplate an early addition to their glass area.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The market has been decidedly quiet during the past week. The shipping demand, while fairly active as to the number of orders received, does not amount to much because each one's requirements are light. Local trade has counted for very little.

Supplies of stock have been more than adequate to the requirements, largely because of the deluge of asters. The aster season is now at its height, but a large part of the receipts are of such poor quality that they are almost unusable and are therefore very difficult to sell. Probably a majority of the asters received in the last week have sold at from 5 cents to 10 cents a bunch, and thousands of bunches have gone into the waste. At the same time strictly fancy asters have had a good market, as there are almost no good carnations, white being in especial demand. The outdoor carnations have suffered from the same cause which makes the asters poor, namely, too much rain.

The receipts of Beauties are on the increase and there are a number of growers who are now cutting very good stock for August. There are also increasing quantities of Brides and Bridesmaids, the young stock showing continued improvement in quality. The color of the Maids is good. Short Kaiserin are very plentiful.

There are again large receipts of Easter lilies. Auratums are a glut. So are gladioli. Tuberoses are equal to all demands. Rudbeckia Golden Glow is seen in all the store windows. Dahlias are becoming more numerous and "green goods" cheap enough so that the store men are providing a place for the flies to roost to save the plate glass.

Various Notes.

The indications are that there will be a good-sized party from Chicago for the convention trip. Everyone likes the idea of stopping in Detroit for a few hours and continuing from there in company with Detroit, St. Louis and others. P. J. Hauswirth, chairman of the transportation committee, reports thirty berths already reserved. Six members of the Poehlmann family are going, the three brothers and their wives. The train pulls out at 11 o'clock next Sunday evening.

E. G. Hill was in town one day last week, full of stories of the many things he saw on his recent tour of European trade centers. He was pleased to find the Richmond rose doing so well with all the local growers.

Weiland & Risch report a call already for young stock of Killarney rose for delivery next year.

J. A. Valentine, of Denver, was in town Tuesday on his way to Boston. He will, of course, be on hand at the convention, for he is one of the never-failing attendants and frequently is the man who has traveled farthest to be present. He is accompanied this year by B. S. Gillis, who has charge of the store.

Wm. Kyle, chief shipping clerk for the Kennicott Bros. Co., is at Colorado Springs, Colo., with his wife and child.

W. E. Lynch and family have returned from their outing at Fremont, Mich.

summer home, harvesting a fine crop of peaches.

Among those who will attend the convention are Fritz Bahr, H. N. Bruns and wife, and John F. Kidwell. N. J. Wietor will also go, Mrs. Wietor and the children visiting in Milwaukee during his absence.

J. A. Budlong has done a fine business with field-grown carnation plants. They had a big lot but could have sold many more, many orders having to be declined. They are cutting roses from young stock in quantity, their Maids having especially fine color.

Leonard Kill is devoting his spare time to amateur photography and is becoming an expert. The illustration on another page of this issue, showing a part of the Peter Reinberg range of glass, and including one of George Reinberg's sections, is from one of Mr. Kill's photographs.

At E. H. Hunt's they have had several busy days with a big importation of French chiffon, a large part of which had been sold prior to its arrival.

E. F. Winterson's mother, who is known and liked by many in the trade, is visiting relatives in Massachusetts.

The Kasting and Beatty bowling trophies were shipped to Washington last Friday. The boys will do what they can next week to re-establish their claim to them.

C. W. McKellar and wife are planning to attend the convention if the demands of business do not prevent.

Matt Mann is cutting a big crop of auratum lilies and Zech & Mann are handling a fine new crop of Beauties.

A recent visitor was W. T. Hamilton of Louisville, Ky.

Jacob Kraft, 1670 North Ashland avenue, was killed by a Northwestern train at Peterson avenue on Saturday. He was 71 years of age.

Fred Sperry, of Vaughan & Sperry, is at his old home in Pennsylvania for a week's visit.

Rudolph J. Mohr, who has been a member of W. J. Smyth's force for several months has bought the A. J. Fidler place at Racine, Wis. It consists of upwards of 20,000 feet of glass and Mr. Mohr has bought real estate, greenhouses and stock complete. He will do a general retail business and, as the town is a good one, has excellent prospects.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. is this week receiving a cut of the Benthey aster grown under glass. The outdoor crops will soon be along.

Geo. Reinberg stands by Liberty. He has had and is getting very good cuts.

Wietor Bros. have been holding a house of Morning Glory carnation which has been giving excellent flowers all along and only threw it out with regret for replanting.

E. F. Winterson Co. is handling Gladiolus America from Frank Banning. The retailers all like it. Word comes from New York that it was the flower used on the Mayflower for the luncheon at which President Roosevelt introduced the Russian and Japanese peace envoys.

Miss Martin, of the Lamborn store at Canton, O., is in town for a few days' visit.

E. C. Amling has been away for a part of the week on a business trip in the country.

Sinner Bros. are handling a large cut of good Easter lilies, the first they have ever grown.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

There is no appreciable change in the situation from the report of last week. Roses are showing up in better form but prices have remained the same. Carnations are hardly fit to handle and cannot be shipped any distance. Asters are looking better this year than for any previous year, sufficient rain having fallen to keep them in good growing condition. Nearly all the stores are doing enough business to keep things moving, although very little stock is kept on hand. The growers have nearly all filled their benches and what stock is planted is showing up well.

Various Notes.

A visit to A. F. Barbe's place is a lesson to the average grower as to how an up-to-date place should be conducted. His business being under his personal supervision, Mr. Barbe is enabled to keep things in first-class condition. Being situated close to a popular cemetery, his place is seldom without customers and consequently he keeps his houses in such shape that it is a pleasure to go through them. His stock so far planted is in fine condition and shows the effect of intelligent care.

Miss J. E. Murray and sister keep a fine stock on hand in spite of the hot weather and are getting their share of the business.

Another store which is an instance of intelligent management is that of Arthur Newell, on Twelfth street. Your correspondent remembers when Mr. Newell entered the business here and we have seen florists come and go, but by painstaking effort and square dealings his business has reached very gratifying proportions and has become one of the permanent fixtures of a progressive town.

Still another place that has gained a foothold upon the top of the ladder is that of Lawrence Schwager, Thirteenth and Grand streets. Opening a store in what was at that time an out of the way corner, failure was predicted for him, but the city is now moving in his direction and what many thought would be a losing venture has proven an unqualified success.

Louis W. Shouse, secretary of the company owning Convention Hall, will attend the Washington convention in the interest of the big flower show to be given in Convention Hall November 13 to 18. Kansas City proposes to again this year have the largest show of the season. The premium list carries $5,000 in "real money," payable to winners the last day of the show, without reference to gate receipts, but the attendance will be all right if the weather is halfway decent.

Ed Ellsworth, of Geo. M. Kellogg's, is on his vacation. Ed is one of our hustling young men and deserves his holiday.

A. Blankenfeld has one of the finest displays to be seen around any greenhouse in the city. Being upon a prominent car line, he has taken infinite pains to make his grounds a show place and has succeeded admirably.

W. H. Humfeld is getting his houses in tip-top shape and his stock is looking fine. Having two places Mr. Humfeld is kept busy looking after both, but seems to be able to keep each in good condition. NARCISSUS.

BUFFALO.

Copious rains at frequent intervals have kept our part of the country fresh and blooming. Sunday afternoon there was a shower that lasted four hours.

Carnation planting has been going on since July 1 and the largest growers are about all housed.

Werick Bros., of Pine Ridge, have let the contract for eight houses, each 26x 125, designed entirely for carnations. The King Construction Co., of Tonawanda, has the contract.

A prominent citizen gave a dinner for Vice-President Fairbanks during his short sojourn in our city last week. American Beauties were the decorations.

Corfu Notes.

Harry Fishel has given up the lease of the Edwards greenhouses in the village of Corfu and is now in the employ of the Wm. Scott Co. Otto Wolff has resigned from the latter firm and has leased the Tyrrell greenhouses in that village.

Wm. Ehmann has 40,000 mums planted that ought to cut some figure in our local market.

David J. Scott, with his young wife, has been taking a week's camping and fishing on the head waters of the Genesee river and "the old man" came out in his absence to run things. Have not yet heard of the weight of the fish, but hope the experience was a second honeymoon.

Charles Sandiford, our prince of good gardeners, left some weeks ago for a short visit to his old country, England, but expects to meet us all in Washington. We hope so, for Charlie has developed into a George Asmus or J. A. Shaw with the sphere.
